ANTISEMITISM RESURGENT: MANIFESTATIONS OF ANTISEMITISM IN THE 21ST CENTURY

Key Points

Modern antisemitism is a repackaging of historic tropes.

Antisemites have adapted conspiracy theories of the blood libel as well as Jewish influence in economic and governmental affairs to fit new circumstances, such as the accusation that Jews are responsible for spreading COVID-19, just as Jews were accused of spreading the plague a millennium ago.

Jews have historically been denied political and economic rights, and modern antisemitism is an expression of the rejection of Jewish integration into society.

While the twentieth century saw the rise of influential Jewish politicians around the world as well as the creation of the Jewish nation-state of Israel, conspiracy theorists continue to accuse Jews of dual loyalties and exerting too much influence in world affairs. Partisan politicians are also increasingly willing to incorporate antisemitic tropes into their rhetoric to attack opponents they view as serving other interests.

Blatantly antisemitic historical legal restrictions on Jewish life have evolved into modern laws restricting basic tenets of Jewish life—

e.g., kosher slaughter and circumcision—with support from both the left and the right, who argue they are protecting animal and children’s rights. These laws largely do not specifically target Jews but still have the effect of restricting Jewish practice.

Antisemitism Resurgent: Manifestations of Antisemitism in the 21st Century

Since the tragic shooting deaths at Pittsburgh’s Tree of Life synagogue in October 2018, the media and commentators have noted an increasing number of antisemitic attacks and the emergence of what many are calling the new antisemitism. While modern communication technologies and globalization have created new outlets for antisemitism, the new antisemitism looks remarkably familiar. Classic antisemitic tropes and conspiracy theories are being repurposed and even finding their way into mainstream political discourse. Rather than being a new type of antisemitism, this is more of a resurgence of classic antisemitism in new clothing. This report explores the types of antisemitism embraced by the far right, the far left, radical Islam, and in politics. It will also examine the common core of antisemitism as practiced by these groups.

In the first half of 2021, antisemitic attacks rose in conjunction with protests against Israel. That May, Israel and Hamas fought an 11-day conflict during which Hamas and Palestinian Islamic Jihad launched more than 4,000 rockets toward Israeli population centers, killing 12 people. Israel launched airstrikes at Hamas and PIJ targets across the Gaza Strip, killing at least 243 Palestinians, according to the Hamas-run health ministry. The Israeli government claims it killed at least 200 militants from Hamas and PIJ.¹ As the conflict wrought destruction across Gaza, anti-Israel rallies took place across the United States and the world—and Jews thousands of miles away from Israel found themselves under assault.

Between May 9 and May 24, Britain’s Jewish community recorded 116 antisemitic incidents, compared to 11 during the same period in 2020. On May 16, a convoy of at least 10 cars brandishing Palestinian flags drove approximately 200 miles across England to the predominantly Jewish London neighborhood of Golders Green. Police arrested at least four people after one participant shouted, “f— the Jews, rape their daughters.”² Also on May 16, two men yelled antisemitic slurs and attacked Rabbi Rafi Goodwin in Chigwell, England.³ In the United States, the Anti-Defamation League reported it received almost 200 reports of antisemitic attacks after the conflict began. The group also noted more than 17,000 Twitter posts with variations of “Hitler was right.”⁴ On May 18 in Los Angeles, a group of men waving Palestinian flags attacked Jewish diners at a sushi restaurant. According to witnesses, the attackers chanted “death to Jews” and “free Palestine.”⁵ A January 2022 report by the World Zionist Organization and the Jewish Agency concluded 2021 had the most antisemitic incidents on record for the past 10 years.⁶ The increase in attacks on Jews has reportedly caused some to consider removing their yarmulkes—skullcaps—in public or hiding other visible signs of their Jewishness.⁷

From the plague to the Great Depression to COVID-19, Jews have long been blamed for catastrophes. The emergence of wealthy Jews in Europe—particularly the Rothschilds—gave rise to the notion that Jews manipulate global events, which was later codified in The Protocols of the Learned Elders of Zion. More than a century since it first appeared in Russia, the Protocols remains a prominent source of antisemitic theories. The forgery has endured and has been repackaged and reinterpreted in a contemporary context. In 2002, for example, an Egyptian TV series drew international outrage for promoting the forgery.⁸

Central to these examples is the idea of the Jew as the powerful puppet master and manipulator, which is rooted in the oldest antisemitic conspiracies. Early Christians blamed Jews for killing Jesus. Medieval rulers blamed Jews for spreading the plague. Jews were blamed for Russia’s communist revolution. Throughout history, Jews were portrayed as shadowy villains. And then The Protocols of the Learned Elders of Zion gave life to new conspiracies about Jewish power and the desire to manipulate and control world affairs. The emergence of a physical Jewish nation-state in 1948 provided antisemites with a centralized representation of Jewish power on the world stage. And while Jewish communities vary in their opinions on and support of Israel, in 2021 Israel’s fight against Hamas further highlighted the violent repercussions of the accusations that all Jews—merely by association—are responsible for the actions of Jewish state.

Conspiracies involving Jewish political power and influence are deeply rooted and influential. As shown in a 2018 CNN poll, one-third of Europeans think Jews are too politically powerful.⁹ Conspiracies about the Rothschilds still abound but new Jewish faces have taken center stage. One of the most prominent Jews at the center of these new conspiracies is George Soros, the Hungarian Holocaust survivor who created a financial empire and is a strong supporter of liberal causes as well as the Democratic Party.

Soros has become a favorite target for the right and far right. Among the crimes blamed on Soros are being a Nazi collaborator,¹⁰ causing the 2008 financial crisis, and funding the migrant caravans that reached the U.S.-Mexican border in late 2018 and early 2019.¹¹

These claims anoint Soros the puppet master of a grand far-left conspiracy. Conspiracies circulate about how Soros survived the Holocaust, painting him as a Nazi collaborator who as a child aided Nazis in looting valuables from the dead bodies of Jews. Other theories have him enlisting in the SS. A 2016 tweet by the user @toombstone, for example, spread an image of a young man, allegedly Soros, in an SS uniform. A Google image search of the photo reveals the individual to be Oskar Groening, a Nazi guard at Auschwitz known as “the book-keeper of Auschwitz.”¹²

Hundreds of years ago, European peasantry accused Jews of spreading the plague by poisoning the wells of Europe. As the world struggled to address the COVID-19 pandemic in 2020, Jews once again became a target of conspiracies. In the early days of the outbreak in the United States, an Orthodox Jewish attorney became Patient Zero in New York state, making the New York Jewish community among the first to contract and spread the virus.¹³ Within the white supremacist sphere, accusations swirled that Jews were either directly responsible for the transmission of the virus or were holding back a cure to maximize profits.¹⁴ In one case in New York City, a couple attacked a

The flyer—erroneously—identified top officials at the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) and other high-profile medical professionals as Jews and labeled COVID-19 part of the “Jewish agenda.”¹⁷ An antisemitic group called the Goyim Defense League (GDL) has offered financial incentives to distribute similar propaganda. In December 2020, similar flyers were left at homes in California, Texas, North Carolina, Idaho, Vermont, Alabama, Illinois, and Florida.¹⁸

The accusations all come from the same place: the notion that Jews wield outsized political influence and the ability to manipulate government policies. Resentment toward the Jewish emancipation of the nineteenth century and their emerging prosperity, as well as the migration of Russians into Europe, fed the spread of the fictitious Protocols throughout Europe in the last century. And while the Protocols itself may be relegated to the corners of far-right websites, antisemites have adapted the essence of its message for the modern era.

This report explores how those perceptions have shaped modern antisemitism, infected every aspect of modern life, and resulted in the highest record of antisemitic violence against Jews in years.

Antisemitism By The Numbers

2021 was the most antisemitic year in the past decade, according to the annual Antisemitism Report of 2021 by the World Zionist Organization (WZO) and the Jewish Agency (JAFI). While no Jews were killed in antisemitic attacks in 2021, the report found an average of 10 antisemitic incidents per day during the year. Almost 50 percent of all antisemitic incidents in 2021 took place in Europe, but Canada and Australia also recorded substantial increases in antisemitism in 2021 over 2020. Major U.S. cities also saw significant increases. New York registered a 100 percent increase in antisemitic incidents over 2020 (503 reported incidents in 2021 versus 252 in 2020), while Los Angeles recorded a 59.1 percent increase in antisemitic incidents in the first six months of 2021.¹⁹

According to an October 2019 poll by the American Jewish Committee (AJC), 38 percent of respondents believe antisemitism in the United States is a serious problem, while 50 percent believe it to be somewhat of a problem. The poll of 1,283 American Jews over age 18 also found that 84 percent of Jews believe antisemitism had increased in the past five years.²⁰ In the same poll, 42 percent reported they felt the status of Jews in the United States was less secure than it had been a year ago, while 36 percent reported that college campuses had become more hostile to pro-Israel students over the preceding year.²¹

These beliefs are substantiated by international polling about antisemitic beliefs. A June 2019 poll of 1,000 Americans by the Public Religion Research Institute on whether small businesses should be able to refuse service based on proprietors' religious beliefs found that a growing number believe it is permissible to refuse service to Jews. According to the poll, 19 percent felt it was permissible to refuse service to Jews if doing so violated religious beliefs. This marks an increase from 12 percent in 2014. The poll also found this belief had mostly increased among political and religious subgroups and gender lines:

- Men: 22 percent in 2019 versus approximately 10 percent in 2014
- Women: 16 percent in 2019 versus approximately 10 percent in 2014
- Republicans: 24 percent in 2019 versus 16 percent in 2014
- Democrats: 17 percent in 2019 versus 9 percent in 2014
- White evangelical Protestants: 24 percent in 2019 versus 12 percent in 2014
- White mainline Protestants: 26 percent in 2019 versus 11 percent in 2014
- Catholics: 20 percent in 2019 versus 10 percent in 2014
- Nonwhite Protestants: 19 percent in 2019 versus 14 percent in 2014
- Religiously unaffiliated: 11 percent in 2019 versus 11 percent in 2014.²²

Violence against Jews and Jewish targets has spiked in recent years. Researchers at Tel Aviv University (TAU) recorded 387 assaults targeting Jews worldwide in 2018, a 13 percent increase over the previous year.²³ That trend continued through 2019 when TAU researchers recorded 456 major violent incidents worldwide, which they defined as arson, weapon attacks, weaponless attacks, serious threats, and vandalism or desecration.²⁴ While more than one-quarter of these attacks took place in the United States, the increase was most noticeable in Western Europe.²⁵

Europe has reported rising antisemitism cases in recent years. The 2021 WZO and JAFI report found Europe recorded more antisemitic incidents that year than any other continent, with almost 50 percent of all global antisemitic incidents reported from Europe. According to the report:

- the United Kingdom recorded 1,308 incidents between January and June 2021, increasing 49 percent from 875 during the same timeframe in 2020.
- Austria increased from 257 incidents during the first six months of 2020 to 562 in the first six months of 2021.
- Germany recorded 1,909 antisemitic incidents throughout all of 2020. In the first 10 months of 2021 alone, from January to October, Germany recorded 1,850 antisemitic incidents.²⁶

Levels of antisemitism and antisemitic violence have risen across Europe since 2014. According to a July 2019 United Nations report, 89 percent of respondents living in Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Germany, France, Hungary, Italy, the Netherlands, Poland, Spain, Sweden, and the United Kingdom believe antisemitism has increased within the past five years. France recorded an 84 percent increase in violent antisemitic attacks from 2017 to 2018. Germany's Federal Ministry of the Interior recorded an annual increase of 13.5 percent in antisemitic incidents between 2015 and 2018. Violent antisemitic incidents in Germany increased by almost 37 percent during that time period.²⁷

The Swedish National Council for Crime Prevention recorded 280 antisemitic hate crimes in 2018, the highest number of yearly incidents on record and a 53 percent increase over the 182 incidents recorded in 2016. The United Kingdom recorded 1,652 antisemitic incidents in 2018, the highest number on record and a 16 percent increase over 2017.²⁸ Incidents included physical attacks on victims as young as 11, vandalism of synagogues, and antisemitic abuse of Jewish members of parliament. The Community Security Trust (CST), the central umbrella organization for the U.K. Jewish community, reported that the figures represented the continuation of a growing trend over the past two years. According to the CST, "this sustained high level of antisemitic incidents suggests a longer-term phenomenon in which people with antisemitic attitudes appear to be more confident to express their views, while incident victims and

In the United States, the FBI recorded a total of 7,314 hate crime incidents in 2019, an increase from 7,120 in 2018 and the highest number since 2008. Of those 7,314 incidents, 1,650 offenses were motivated by religious bias and 60.3 percent of those incidents targeted Jews.³⁰ Jews comprised 56.9 percent of the 1,617 victims of religious bias crimes recorded by the FBI in 2018.³¹ The FBI’s statistics over the 10-year period between 2009 and 2018 demonstrate that Jews have consistently been the largest group targeted group by bias crimes in the United States.³²

Since the October 2018 Tree of Life murders, there has been a noticeable increase in the number of publicly reported attacks against people who are visibly Jewish, particularly in areas of New York City and other areas with significant Jewish populations. For example, two identifiably Jewish men were physically assaulted in separate incidents in Brooklyn, New York, on January 30, 2019, resulting in the arrest of two individuals for assault and hate crimes.⁴⁶ On August 27, 2019, a 64-year-old rabbi was hit in the head with a brick while walking to synagogue in Brooklyn.⁴⁷

On one hand, the increased numbers are indicative of better reporting of antisemitic crimes to law enforcement and amplified public awareness. Still, the numbers point to a worrisome trend of increased Jewish harassment and persecution. Speaking to the Jewish Telegraphic Agency in September 2019, Deborah Lautner, the head of New York City's new Office for the Prevention of Hate Crimes, suggested multiple possible reasons for the increase, from hostility from New York's other ethnic communities and increasingly antagonistic rhetoric from elected officials, to wider press coverage leading to copycats.⁴⁸

On October 27, 2018, Robert Bowers killed 11 people in an attack on the Tree of Life synagogue in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. It was the deadliest attack on a synagogue in

U.S. history.⁴⁹ Following the Pittsburgh attack, U.S. media reported an increased number of antisemitic vandalism and attacks on Jewish sites around the United States.⁵⁰ According to the 2018 Global anti-Semitism Report, released by the Israeli government in January 2019, 13 Jews were killed in antisemitic attacks worldwide in 2018, the highest number recorded in decades.⁵¹

Major attacks like that at the Tree of Life and the April 2019 attack on the Chabad house in Poway, California, were perpetrated by individuals who expressed their hatred of Jews in the language of the far right. According to authorities, Bowers accused Jews during the attack of “committing genocide of my people” and so he “just wanted to kill Jews.”⁵² On April 27, 2019, John Earnest attacked the Chabad house in Poway, California, on the last day of Passover, killing one and wounding three others. Had his assault weapon not malfunctioned, the death toll would have likely been much higher. Earnest claimed inspiration from Brenton Tarrant, who killed 51 people during twin mosque shootings in New Zealand a month before.⁵³ On October 9, 2019, during Yom

By the end of 2019, antisemitic attacks in the United States reached a four-decade high, according to the Anti-Defamation League (ADL). The organization recorded a 56 percent increase in assaults over the previous year, resulting in five fatalities.⁵⁵ French police recorded 687 antisemitic acts in 2019, including vandalism and physical threats.⁵⁶

The timeline below highlights major violent attacks from the year 2000 through 2022. It also examines the motives of the attackers when possible. The attacks included are specifically violent and targeted primarily at Jewish institutions and religious observances, such as Passover seders or Chanukah parties. The timeline also includes major attacks on individual Jews.

A group of 20 individuals calling themselves the Gang of Barbarians kidnap 23-year-old Ilan Halimi, of Moroccan-Jewish descent, in Paris and hold him captive for three weeks in the Paris suburb of Bagneux. The kidnappers demand 450,000 euros from Halimi's family. Gang leader Youssouf Fofana tells his accomplices they will receive the ransom because all Jews are rich. They torture Halimi while negotiating with his parents over the phone and reportedly read passages from the Quran to Halimi's parents while he screams in the background. After three weeks without a negotiated settlement, the kidnappers leave Halimi naked and with burns on 80 percent of his body on a road in Sainte-Geneviève-Des-Bois on February 13. A passerby calls an ambulance and Halimi later dies at a hospital. During his trial, gang leader Youssouf Fofana describes himself as a "trader of terror." He is sentenced to life in prison in 2009, while 26 others involved in the kidnapping/murder receive sentences ranging from six months to 18 years in prison. Some of the accomplices are minors. Fofana receives an additional 10-year sentence in 2017. Halimi's mother, Ruth, later writes that French police ignored the antisemitic nature of the kidnapping.⁶¹

On November 26, gunmen armed with grenades and automatic weapons launch a three-day siege of Nariman House, the local Chabad center in Mumbai, India, taking hostage at least eight people. One of the gunmen identifies himself as Imran Babar and complains to an Indian television station about Israeli interference in Indian affairs. Indian special forces storm the building on the third day. Seven people are killed in the attack, including the Chabad emissaries Rabbi Gavriel and Rivka Holtzberg. According to Mumbai police, some of the victims inside the Chabad house were killed by strangulation. The Holtzbergs' nanny escaped on the second day of the siege with the couple's almost-2-year-old son. The attack is part of a series of coordinated attacks by 10 Pakistani militants affiliated with Lashkar-e-Tayyiba on multiple targets around Mumbai frequented by Westerners that altogether kill 164 people. The lone surviving gunman, Mohammed Ajmal Kasab, is executed in November 2012.⁶³

James Wenneker von Brunn shoots and kills a security guard inside the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum in Washington, D.C. Security guards shoot and wound von Brunn, but he continues to fire until he is apprehended. An avowed white supremacist, von Brunn had previously self-published a book praising Adolf Hitler and ran a website called Holy Western Empire. Von Brunn is charged with first-degree murder, killing in a federal building, and bias-motivated crime. He died in 2010 at age 89 before facing trial.⁶⁴

Anthony Graziano and Aakash Dalal spray paint antisemitic graffiti on two synagogues in Maywood and Hackensack, in New Jersey. On January 3, Graziano starts a fire outside of Temple K’hal Adath Jeshrun in Paramus, New Jersey. There are no injuries. On January 7, Graziano attempts to throw a firebomb at the Jewish Community Center in Paramus but abandons the plan. On January 11, Graziano throws Molotov cocktails through the second-floor window of Congregation Beth El in Rutherford, New Jersey, into the bedroom of the synagogue’s rabbi, Nosson Schuman, who lives on the second floor with his family. The Molotov cocktail starts a fire, causing minor injuries. All incidents take place in New Jersey’s Bergen County. In 2016, Graziano is convicted of terrorism and 19 other counts and sentenced to 35 years in prison. Dalal is convicted on 16 counts and sentenced to 35 years. Dalal is accused of masterminding the attacks. He previously told Graziano, “I don’t trust you until you kill a Jew.”⁶⁵

Kobili Traoré breaks into the Paris apartment of 65-year-old Jewish woman Sarah Halimi. He allegedly recites verses from the Quran as he beats her and then throws her from her third-story window. According to witnesses, Traoré shouts, “I’ve killed the Shaitan [devil]!” Traore confesses to the murder but says he was not motivated by antisemitism and not in the correct state of mind. Authorities initially rule that the crime was antisemitic, but in July 2019 a judge rules that Traoré is “not criminally responsible” because he was high on marijuana at the time. A court of appeal upholds that decision later in the year, sparking protest in Paris’s Jewish community. On April 14, 2021, the French Court of Cassation’s Supreme Court of Appeals upholds rulings by lower courts that Traore cannot stand trial because he was too high on marijuana to be criminally responsible for his actions. The decision sparks widespread protests in France, the United Kingdom, Israel, and the United States.⁷¹

Armed with an AR-15 assault rifle and other weapons, Robert Bowers attacks the Tree of Life Synagogue in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, where members of the Tree of Life, Dor Hadash, and New Light Jewish congregations gather for Shabbat services. Bowers talks during the attack of his desire to “kill Jews,” claiming Jews are “committing genocide of my people.” Bowers kills 11 people and wounds six others. Bowers is wounded during an ensuing gunfight with police. He is taken into custody and charged with multiple hate crimes, murder, and attempted murder. Bowers pleads not guilty in February 2019. Six months to the day after the Pittsburgh shooting, John Earnest attacks the Chabad house in Poway, California, with an AR-15 on the last day of Passover, killing one and wounding three others, including the rabbi and an 8-year-old girl. An armed off-duty Border Patrol officer and other congregants chase Earnest out of the building. Police arrest Earnest as he is attempting to flee in his car. Earnest is charged with 109 federal hate crimes, including murder and attempted murder. Earnest pleads not guilty in October 2019. Earnest claims inspiration from New Zealand shooter Brenton Tarrant, who killed 51 people at two mosques a month earlier. Earnest wrote in his manifesto that he hoped to inspire similar shootings. On September 17, 2021, Earnest pleads guilty to a 113-count hate crimes indictment. He admits he had opened fire at the Poway Chabad and had set fire to the Dar-ul-Arqam Mosque in Escondido, California, on March 24, 2019, because he wanted to kill Muslims and Jews. Under the terms of Earnest's plea agreement, the United States and Earnest will jointly recommend a sentence of life in prison plus 30 years.⁷⁷

called to the synagogue by 11 a.m. Akram reportedly claims to have a bomb. Multiple people listening to the livestream of the synagogue's service also report hearing him refer to Siddiqui as his sister, but a representative of the Council on American-Islamic Relations (CAIR) tells the Associated Press that Siddiqui's brother, Mohammad Siddiqui, is not involved. One hostage is released just after 5 p.m. By 9:30 p.m., all hostages are released unharmed as a rescue team enters the building. Authorities declare Akram is dead. Investigators initially suspected he may have been motivated by a desire to have Siddiqui released. An FBI investigator says Akram "was singularly focused on one issue, and [the attack] was not specifically related to the Jewish community." U.S. President Joe Biden condemns the attack as an act of terror and acknowledges Akram made antisemitic and anti-Israel remarks. A law enforcement source tells media Akram stated during the hostage crisis he knew would die and wanted Siddiqui brought to the synagogue so they could die together. Congregation Beth Israel is 24 miles from the Federal Medical Center, Carswell, in Fort Worth, where Siddiqui is incarcerated. Siddiqui's attorney denies she had any involvement in the synagogue attack. The FBI continues to investigate the influence of Siddiqui's case on Akram.⁸⁵

An examination of violent antisemitic attacks on Jews and Jewish institutions of the twenty-first century reveals the patterns of who is threatening the Jewish community. Of the recorded major attacks in the United States between 2000 and 2020, one attacker—Naveed Afzal Haq in the July 2006 Seattle shooting—claimed he was directly motivated to attack Jews because of his Muslim identity and anger over U.S.-Israeli policies. Four other U.S. attacks were identifiably motivated by white nationalism. One unsuccessful December 2018 plot drew inspiration from both white nationalism and Islamism. That month, the FBI arrested 21-year-old Dutch native Damon Joseph on charges of plotting to attack a synagogue in Toledo, Ohio. Joseph told an undercover FBI agent that he wanted to kill a rabbi and was inspired by the Pittsburgh attack. Joseph went by the name Abdullah Ali Yusuf and was charged with attempting to provide material support to ISIS.⁸⁶ Authorities in Las Vegas, Nevada, stopped another attack on August 8, 2019, when they arrested Conor Climo for planning to bomb a synagogue or LGBTQ club.⁸⁷ In February 2020, Climo pleaded guilty to possession of an unregistered firearm—specifically, the component parts of a destructive device. Climo had also been in communication with members of the white supremacist group Feuerkrieg Division, a European offshoot of the U.S.-based Atomwaffen Division.⁸⁸

While white nationalists have largely—but not exclusively—carried out violent anti-Jewish attacks in the United States, Arab and Muslim assailants have been largely responsible for attacks in Europe. Further, the European attackers have more often claimed affiliation with a larger jihadist terrorist network, such as al-Qaeda or ISIS. Mohamed Merah, who killed four people at the Ozar Hatorah Jewish School in Toulouse, France, in March 2012, was affiliated with al-Qaeda and claimed during a standoff with police that he was avenging the deaths of Palestinians while attacking France for banning Islamic veils. Merah died during the confrontation.⁸⁹ Mehdi Nemmouche, who killed four in a 2014 attack at the Jewish Museum in Brussels, Belgium, was a former ISIS fighter whose lawyer claimed he was targeting Mossad (Israel’s national intelligence agency) agents during his assault on the museum.⁹⁰

The Jersey City attack left three people dead, as well as the two attackers, David Anderson and Francine Graham. Israelites groups adhere to the same antisemitic propaganda.⁹¹ In the second attack, an African American man identified as Grafton E. Thomas attacked a Chanukah party in Monsey, New York, killing one and wounding four.⁹² According to the criminal complaint against him, Thomas had searched the Internet for Nazi-related terms, as well as “why did Hitler hate the Jews” and “prominent companies founded by Jews in America.” He had also searched for “German Jewish Temples near me” and “Zionist Temples” in New Jersey and Staten Island. Thomas appeared unaffiliated with any major group but had written about Adolf Hitler and “Nazi culture” in his journals.⁹³

Reviving Anti-Jewish Laws

In the twenty-first century, Jews enjoy more political and economic freedom than at any other time in history. But while Jews are not directly targeted by state sponsored regulations, they have found themselves targeted indirectly by new laws that restrict historical practices of the Jewish community. In the twenty-first century, European nations have begun to restrict religious slaughter of meat, public displays of religious clothing, and the practice of circumcision. Europe’s far-right parties have spearheaded these types of restrictions to curb growing Islamic migrant communities, but Jews have also found themselves caught in the crossfire. Many of these new legalistic restrictions on Jewish life have also garnered support from the left under the guise of protecting human—and animal—rights.

Across Europe, governments are imposing restrictions on the practice of circumcision on the basis of protecting the rights of children. The right views circumcision as an alien practice imposed by Muslim immigrants, while left-wing political parties also argue the rights of children outweigh their parents' rights to freedom of religion. A German court issued a non-binding ruling in 2012 that male circumcision for religious purposes "causes bodily harm" that outweighs parents' right to their beliefs.⁹⁴ In September 2013, the children's ombudsmen representing Finland, Iceland, Denmark, Sweden, and Norway jointly called for a ban on the practice.⁹⁵ Iceland's government became the first in 2018 to announce a proposed ban on non-medical circumcision, which Jewish, Muslim, and Catholic leaders called an attack on religious freedom.⁹⁶ Jewish groups have warned that criminalizing circumcision would make Jewish life impossible, as it is an integral part of the Jewish lifecycle.

Circumcision is not the only Jewish practice under legal threat in Europe. Spurred by both far-left animal-rights groups as well as by far-right xenophobes, Belgium became the latest in a growing list of European countries to ban kosher slaughter in January 2019.⁹⁷ European law requires that animals be stunned prior to slaughter.⁹⁸ Both kosher and Islamic halal laws require the animal to be in perfect health prior to slaughter. Stunning is considered an abrogation of the laws of kosher slaughter (“shechita” in Hebrew) because the animal is no longer in perfect health.⁹⁹ In both Jewish and Islamic ritual slaughter, a sharp knife is used to cut the trachea, esophagus, and the carotid arteries of the throat in one fluid motion, causing instant death.

Several European countries have moved to eliminate religious exemptions. Poland banned kosher slaughter in 2013, though a court overturned the decree the following year after a religious freedom challenge by Poland’s Union of Jewish Religious Communities.¹⁰⁰ In December 2018, laws banning the methods of kosher and halal slaughter went into effect in Belgium. Belgian Jewish leaders told the Jewish Telegraphic Agency they feared the ban would be a prelude to a ban on importing kosher meat from elsewhere within the European Union.¹⁰¹

While they are largely at odds with each other, the left and the right have found common ground in opposing circumcision and religious animal slaughter. Both sides argue the issues as promoting the rights of animals and voiceless children. Europe’s right wing, however, has also made clear that practices such as circumcision are viewed as a foreign import by Muslim migrants and thus these restrictions would protect Europe’s identity.¹⁰² The antisemitism of these laws is not as blatant as those of the past as Jews are not the specific target, but the effect is the same: Jews would be forced to either relocate to other countries or abandon their core religious practices.¹⁰³

Modern Political Antisemitism

Blatant antisemitism has been a rhetorical component of the far right and the far left, but it has also bled into the mainstream political language of the left and right as the U.S. political sphere has become increasingly polarized. With that division, classic antisemitic tropes have seeped into the political conversation, both targeting Jews directly and in attacking political opponents who happen to be Jewish. Conversely, antisemitism has become a political football as the left and the right accuse each other of being more antisemitic and thus the larger danger—all while ignoring the antisemitism within their own political circles.

Some of this political antisemitism has been overt. Ahead of the U.S. midterm elections in November 2018, for example, several Republicans across the country released images painting their Jewish political opponents clutching money, playing on the stereotype of greedy Jews.¹⁰⁴ During a December 2015 address to the Republican Jewish Coalition, U.S. President Donald Trump seemed to reference supposed Jewish political and financial power:

You're not gonna support me because I don't want your money. You want to control your politicians, that's fine. Five months ago I was with you. I do want your support, but I don't want your money.¹⁰⁵

Some on the far right have viewed Trump's comments as a validation of their own antisemitic positions.¹⁰⁶ Others on the far right have viewed Trump as subservient to Jews. Robert Bowers, who murdered 11 in his 2018 attack on Pittsburgh's Tree of Life synagogue, castigated Trump for not sufficiently calling out Jewish power.¹⁰⁷ Indeed, Trump's Jewish son-in-law, Jared Kushner, and his daughter Ivanka, a convert to Judaism, have been the target of antisemitic attacks. Kushner found himself targeted by a group of far-right individuals who developed an online script that placed the names of prominent Jews in parentheses to signal that they were Jewish.¹⁰⁸

Jews have long been subjected to the accusation that they are disloyal to the nations in which they reside. Napoleon Bonaparte demanded Jews declare loyalty to France before they could gain political rights. In 1896, a group of Jewish Civil War veterans formed the Hebrew Union Veterans, which eventually became known as the Jewish War Veterans of the U.S.A. (JWV).¹⁰⁹ The JWV's mission statement includes fostering love of America, maintaining “true allegiance” to the United States, instilling “love of country and flag,” and fighting against bigotry.¹¹⁰ Groups like the JWV were necessitated by the continuation of the disloyalty charge. While that charge led to historic tragedies such as the Dreyfus Affair in France at the turn of the nineteenth century, it has become a political weapon of both the left and right in modern politics.

U.S. Jews have been subjected to two strands of dual loyalty claims: The accusation of loyalty to the global Jewish community; and the relatively newer accusation of loyalty to the State of Israel. In an effort to circumvent the latter, Israeli Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion declared in 1950 that the “Jews of the United States, as a community and as individuals, have only one political attachment and that is to the United States of America. They owe no political allegiance to Israel.”¹¹¹ Nonetheless, Jews in the United States—like the majority of the general U.S. public—overwhelmingly support the State of Israel.¹¹² The American Israel Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC) is one of the most powerful lobbies in Washington. As such, it has become a symbol—rightly or wrongly—of Jewish influence over the U.S. government. As AIPAC’s raison d’être is the promotion of U.S. ties with the Jewish nation-state, its critics often accuse it of putting foreign interests above U.S. interests and accuse AIPAC’s supporters of dual loyalties.

During national discussions in 2015 on the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Actions, the so-called Iran deal negotiated by President Barack Obama, world powers, and Iran to prevent the Islamic Republic from acquiring nuclear weapons, voices from both sides of the political aisle accused Obama of inciting antisemitism through comments about

AIPAC and the power of the Jewish lobby, as well as his alleged dismissal of antisemitism in the Iranian government. In a May 2015 interview with Jeffrey Goldberg of the Atlantic, Obama attempted to portray the Iranian regime as a rational actor whose desire to remain in power outweighed its animosity toward Jews: “Well the fact that you are antisemitic, or racist, doesn’t preclude you from being interested in survival.”¹¹³ Tony Badran of the Foundation for Defense of Democracies accused Obama of attempting to excuse Iranian antisemitism and “whitewash” the regime in order to promote the nuclear deal.¹¹⁴

AIPAC at the time was one of the leading opponents of the Iran deal and was actively campaigning against it. Obama further enflamed the U.S. Jewish community as he was promoting the Iran deal during the summer of 2015. During an appearance on The Daily Show With Jon Stewart that July, Obama called out “lobbyists” and “money” the deal’s opponents were corralling.¹¹⁵ After the deal was signed that month, Obama challenged his critics in Congress to evaluate the agreement “not based on lobbying, but based on what’s in the national interests of the United States of America.”¹¹⁶ Later that summer, Obama accused opponents of the deal of seeking to lead the United States to war as they did with Iraq in 2003. Republican Jewish Coalition executive director Matt Brooks accused Obama of “demonizing Americans who are rightly skeptical of his dubious deal with the Tehran regime.”¹¹⁷ Obama’s comments raised concerns across the U.S. Jewish community that Obama was specifically blaming the Jewish community for pushing the United States toward war out of a greater loyalty to Israel. Former ADL League director Abraham Foxman said that while he did not believe Obama was deliberately promoting tropes of Jewish political influence, the president’s comments could end up “fueling and legitimizing antisemitic stereotypes out there that Jews are warmongers.”¹¹⁸

In both the leadup to the Iran deal and to the 2003 Iraq war, some viewed the so-called Jewish lobby as either directly influencing or attempting to influence U.S. policy to war to promote the interests of Israel—a clear representation of the dual loyalty accusation. In both cases, accusations emerged that the organized U.S. Jewish community was promoting the interests of Israel over the interests of the United States. In 2013, New York Times columnist Thomas Friedman directly accused pro-Israel lobbyists and U.S. lawmakers of putting the interests of AIPAC and Jewish campaign donations above that of the country. He wrote he had never seen more lawmakers on either side of the aisle “more willing to take Israel’s side against their own president’s,” and he was “certain this comes less from any careful consideration of the facts and more from a growing tendency by many American lawmakers to do whatever the Israel lobby asks them to do in order to garner Jewish votes and campaign donations.”¹¹⁹ Former Atlantic writer and editor Matthew Yglesias noted in 2007 that AIPAC and other pro-Israel groups such as the Washington Institute for Near East Policy, the Saban Center, and Jewish Institute for National Security of America (JINSA) “advocated strongly in favor of invasion.”¹²⁰ Yglesias added that he did not mean to imply “the Jews caused the war,” but said it was “still true” these pro-Israel organizations played a role.¹²¹

These accusations merited outcry,¹²² but were ultimately forgotten by the zeitgeist. Nevertheless, they set a tone that has allowed other politicians to continue to promote charges of undue Jewish political power and the divided loyalty of the American Jewish community. Democratic Representative Ilhan Omar of Minnesota has elicited widespread condemnation for a series of statements and tweets alleging dual loyalty and Jewish financial influence over the U.S. government. During a February 2019 progressive town hall, Omar took issue with what she called the “political influence in this country that says it is okay for people to push for allegiance to a foreign country.”¹²³ In a since-deleted tweet that month, Omar declared that U.S. support for Israel was “all about the Benjamins.” In response to a Twitter comment asking who was paying for that support, she responded, “AIPAC.”¹²⁴ The House’s Democratic leadership condemned Omar’s “use of anti-Semitic tropes and prejudicial accusations about Israel’s supporters” as “deeply offensive.”¹²⁵ Omar apologized for the comments after receiving backlash but at the same time again called out AIPAC, among other lobby

The dual loyalty question has not manifested itself solely in U.S. politics. In October 2019, U.K. Labour Party lawmaker Louise Ellman resigned from the party she had belonged to for 55 years, alleging that far-left activists within the party had accused her of dual loyalty to Israel. She told the Telegraph that since she joined parliament in 1997, a new far-left contingent of lawmakers had joined the Labour Party and “endorsed anti-Semitic conspiracy theories and came from revolutionary Communist groups.”¹²⁸

According to Ellman, far-left antisemitism has risen in the Labour Party under the leadership of M.P. Jeremy Corbyn, who himself has been accused of forming relationships with terrorist groups such as Hezbollah and Hamas, which he described as “friends” during a 2009 parliamentary meeting. Corbyn later said he regretted the classification, describing it as “inclusive language I used which with hindsight I would rather not have used.”¹²⁹ In 2014, Corbyn attended a wreath-laying ceremony in Tunisia that honored members of Black September, the Palestinian terrorist group that orchestrated the 1972 massacre of Israeli athletes at the Munich Olympics. A Labour statement said he was attending a ceremony honoring those killed in a 1985 Israeli airstrike on Palestine Liberation Organization offices in Tunis, but Corbyn later told the Guardian that there was also a commemoration for Black September members allegedly killed by the Mossad in 1992 in retaliation for Munich.¹³⁰ Corbyn assumed the leadership of the Labour Party in 2015.¹³¹ Corbyn again sparked controversy in June 2016 when he made a comparison between ISIS and Israel:

Our Jewish friends are no more responsible for the actions of Israel or the Netanyahu government than our Muslim friends are for those of various self-styled Islamic states or organisations.¹³²

Other members of Labour—including former London Mayor Ken Livingstone and parliamentarians Naz Shah and Chris Williamson—have also faced accusations of antisemitism for various comments and been suspended from the party as a result. Corbyn issued apologies in 2018 for a 2010 event he attended during which a Holocaust survivor compared Israel to Nazis and for sending a supportive message in 2012 to the creator of a mural that depicted a cabal controlling the world order and employed historic antisemitic tropes.¹³³ Several Labour Party members resigned in early 2019 in protest over Corbyn’s handling of Brexit and antisemitism within the party.¹³⁴ In April 2018, the Jewish Labour Movement passed a no-confidence motion against Corbyn.¹³⁵ A September 2018 poll found that 85 percent of British Jews believed Corbyn to be antisemitic, while 85.6 percent believed the Labour Party to be antisemitic. By comparison, a poll of the general public found that 39 percent believed Corbyn to be antisemitic.¹³⁶

After Corbyn’s Labour Party had its worst showing since 1935 in the U.K.’s December 2019 parliamentary elections, Labour loyalists and Corbyn allies alleged that foreign agents—i.e., supporters of Israel—had mobilized against Labour to sway the vote. Accusations ranged from indirectly blaming foreign powers to specifically saying Likud—the right-wing political party of Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu—had orchestrated the defeat. Others alleged that Jews had used claims of antisemitism to manipulate the election.¹³⁷

Accusations that Jews wield disproportional political power and influence continue to resurface. In Britain, the left blamed Jews for Labour's defeat. In the U.S., the right accuses wealthy and influential Jews such as George Soros of masterminding a leftist revolution. The proliferation of antisemitic stereotypes in political conversations—such as Jewish wealth or political influence—in political contexts succeeds in sowing division among political opponents.

The propagation of antisemitism in politics can be partially attributed to increased polarization. The Pew Research Center found in 2016 and 2017 surveys that the American public had become increasingly entrenched in ideological and partisan positions since the 1990s.¹³⁸ One result of this polarization is an increased willingness to demonize the opposing side. Classic antisemitic tropes were designed to sow discord and mistrust, so it may not be surprising they would surface in a political environment. As with the modern European legislation targeting Jewish practices, Jews as a group may not be the primary target but they are caught in the backlash. Political propaganda utilizing these antisemitic tropes tends to inspire violence. In October 2018, for instance, authorities discovered a pipe bomb at Soros's home.¹³⁹

The United States and the other member nations of the International Holocaust Remembrance Alliance (IHRA) adopted the organization’s definition of antisemitism in 2016, though it is legally non-binding and there have been calls for Congress to make it into law.¹⁴⁰ The IHRA specifies accusing Jewish citizens of “being more loyal to Israel, or to the alleged priorities of Jews worldwide, than to the interests of their own nations” is a form of antisemitism.¹⁴¹

Jews are not alone in facing accusations of dual loyalty. As a presidential candidate in 1960, John F. Kennedy faced charges that as a Catholic he would be more loyal to the pope and the Vatican than to the U.S. Constitution.¹⁴² American Muslims have also been subjected to accusations that they are loyal to the Muslim Brotherhood or other extremist groups.¹⁴³ For American Jews who have long struggled for equality—in the United States and elsewhere—the accusation is particularly damning. The charge declares that one can be Jewish or American but not both. It is an attack on the very identity of American Jews that robs them of the ability to define themselves.

The charge becomes even more disturbing when those in political power hurl it, which harkens back to the disastrous recent past. The Nazi regime destroyed the German-Jewish identity by forcing its own definition of who is a Jew upon the country’s Jews. Secular Jews who completely assimilated into German culture in the early twentieth century—to the point of serving in the German army in World War I—found themselves on the same transports to the concentration camps as their more observant coreligionists. That memory is still fresh for many in the Jewish community who understandably become nervous when politicians begin to toss around the dual loyalty charge.

Holocaust Denial

Between 1943 and 1944, an average of 6,000 Jews were gassed to death per day at the Auschwitz concentration camp in Poland, according to the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum. The Nazis previously used diesel engines to produce carbon monoxide in mobile killing centers at other camps, but discovered at Auschwitz that Zyklon B was a more efficient method for mass murder.¹⁴⁴ On October 14, 2019, Jordan’s Al-Finiq TV broadcast a conference held in the country called “The Holocaust – the Biggest Lie in Modern History.” Over the course of the conference, Jordanian researcher Mahmoud Awad concluded that the Nazis had used Zyklon B to disinfect clothing, not to murder Jews. The goal of the Final Solution, Awad argued, was only to drive the Jews out of Germany because they were detrimental to both German and Western culture.¹⁴⁵

Holocaust denial and revisionism have become central components of antisemitic conspiracies regarding Jewish power and influence. In December 2006, then-Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad convened the International Conference to Review the Global Vision of the Holocaust. The conference drew almost 70 attendees from 30 countries, including notables such as former Ku Klux Klan leader David Duke, who praised Ahmadinejad for providing a forum in which to question the official record of the Holocaust.¹⁴⁶ Ahmadinejad himself had previously referred to the Holocaust as a myth “above God, religion and the prophets.”¹⁴⁷ According to a September 2018 CNN poll, half of Europeans believe commemorating the Holocaust helps fight antisemitism but one-third believe Jews use the Holocaust to advance their own goals.¹⁴⁸ The International Holocaust Remembrance Alliance (IHRA) 2016 definition of antisemitism specifically classifies Holocaust denial and revisionism as an example of contemporary antisemitism:

Denying the fact, scope, mechanisms (e.g. gas chambers) or intentionality of the genocide of the Jewish people at the hands of National Socialist Germany and its supporters and accomplices during World War II (the Holocaust).¹⁴⁹

In January 2022, the U.N. General Assembly adopted a resolution condemning denial and distortion of the Holocaust. The resolution—put forward by Israel, cosponsored by Germany, and supported by the United States and dozens of other countries—declares the Holocaust “will forever be a warning to all people of the dangers of hatred, bigotry, racism and prejudice.”¹⁵⁰ The resolution expressed concern about “the growing prevalence of Holocaust denial or distortion through the use of information and communications technologies,” and called on all U.N. members to develop educational programs on the Holocaust and “reject without any reservation any denial or distortion of the Holocaust as a historical event, either in full or in part, or any activities to this end.”¹⁵¹

The veracity of the Holocaust is a matter of historical record. Museums and archives have preserved eyewitness accounts, photographs, and physical evidence of its horrors. Nonetheless, revisionists have created an industry around Holocaust denial and revisionism. It can be broken down into two primary intersecting ideas: The record of the Holocaust is false or has been exaggerated and Jews abuse the memory of the Holocaust to garner sympathy and maintain influence. At the core of each is the accusation that Jews have distorted history, drawing again from the idea of a powerful Jewish conspiracy that manipulates global attitudes, historical records, and international affairs.

Holocaust Myth One: Jews Falsify or Exaggerate the Holocaust

The details and scope of the Holocaust continue to come under attack by litigious revisionist historians using dubious scholarship and abusing academic freedoms. British revisionist David Irving, who has argued in books and papers that Jews were not gassed at the Auschwitz extermination camp, is one of many who contend that Jews have misrepresented and exaggerated the Holocaust. His website is a collection of Holocaust denial and antisemitic conspiracies, defenses of Nazism, and accusations of Jewish manipulation, lies, and thievery.¹⁵² In her 1994 book Denying the Holocaust: The Growing Assault on Truth and Memory, noted Holocaust historian Deborah Lipstadt labeled Irving a Holocaust denier and a bigot who manipulated historical records to fit his agenda. Irving launched a libel suit against Lipstadt in 1996. In 2000, a judge ruled that Irving had failed to prove that Lipstadt had damaged his reputation. The judge further ruled that Irving was “an active Holocaust denier; that he was antisemitic and racist and that he associated with right-wing extremists who promoted neo-Nazism.”¹⁵³ Irving was later jailed for 13 months in Austria, where Holocaust denial is a crime.¹⁵⁴ He has since organized tours of Nazi sites in Germany, including the bunker where Hitler committed suicide.¹⁵⁵

A separate publishing industry has cropped up around Holocaust revisionism after World War II. Pseudo-historians typically attempt to cast doubt on the Holocaust while claiming that they are “just asking questions.” Groups like the U.S.-based Institute for Historical Review (IHR), known for publishing material promoting Holocaust denial, claim they do not deny history but seek to provide more in-depth investigations to ascertain the truth. The IHR claims to have no position on the Holocaust and denies accusations of historical revisionism, arguing instead that they “encourage more objective investigation.”¹⁵⁶ IHR research has referred to the Holocaust as a “sacred cow” that is nothing more than a metaphor for Jewish history,¹⁵⁷ and decried global Holocaust remembrances as “an expression of Jewish-Zionist power ... designed to further Jewish-Zionist interests.”¹⁵⁸

International courts have ruled against Holocaust revisionism since the 1980s. Nonetheless, pseudo-scholars have continued to use the court system in attempts to shield their views under the guise of free speech and academic freedom. In 1981, Los Angeles County Superior Court Judge Thomas T. Johnson ruled that the Holocaust was “a fact and not subject to dispute.”¹⁵⁹ Canadian courts twice convicted German-born scholar Ernst Zündel in 1985 and 1988 under a Canadian law that prohibits spreading false news likely to harm the public interest.¹⁶⁰ Zündel produced books, audio tapes, and other media denying the Holocaust and promoting neo-Nazi propaganda while living in Canada. During Zündel’s 1985 trial, Alan Shefman, the Canadian national director of the League for Human Rights of B’nai B’rith, called Holocaust denial “the future of anti-Semitism.”¹⁶¹ Both of Zündel’s convictions were overturned—the first on a technicality and the second after the Canadian Supreme Court ruled the original law unreasonably restricted free speech. overstaying his visa, Zündel was deported to Germany, where he was convicted for inciting hatred and violating the memory of the dead. Zündel died in 2017.¹⁶²

On October 3, 2019, the European Court of Human Rights (ECHR) ruled that Holocaust denial is not protected speech, rejecting a complaint by Udo Pastörs, a former politician from Germany's far-right National Democratic Party \(NPD\). Pastörs's complaint stemmed from his 2012 conviction for inciting hatred against Jews and Turks during an NPD meeting. Pastörs argued that the conviction trampled on his right to free speech.¹⁶³

Holocaust revisionists have used academia to distort the level of persecution against Jews during the Holocaust. Israeli researchers in October 2019 revealed that Polish nationals had manipulated Wikipedia for 15 years to present a false history of the Holocaust that portrayed ethnic Poles as victims of the Nazis as much as Jewish Poles. The manipulation took the form of an entry about a Nazi death camp in Warsaw called Konzentrationslager Warschau in which more than 200,000 people were killed. The entry went online in 2004 and remained there until 2019 when researchers discovered it and confirmed that no such camp existed.¹⁶⁴

Holocaust Myth Two: Jews Abuse the Holocaust for Sympathy and Influence

The far-right has embraced Holocaust denial and revisionism in its quest to demonstrate Jewish domination. In the summer of 2019, the Daily Stormer Book Club posted flyers on synagogues and churches in New England calling the Holocaust “fake news” and declaring that the people who “lied about soap and lampshades are lying about gas chambers and ovens.”¹⁶⁵ White nationalist John De Nugent has uploaded multiple videos glorifying Hitler and examining historic cases of antisemitism through the lens of white nationalism.¹⁶⁶ De Nugent has praised Hitler and warned of a white genocide and the “Jewish war machine” while calling for the creation of a new white republic.¹⁶⁷

One common form of revisionism is to reverse the roles of victim and persecutor, painting Germany as victim of a Jewish conspiracy. In one theory, Jews—and specifically the Rothschild family—started World War II because Hitler brought Germany out of the banking debt that was drowning the German people and took Germany off the Rothschild gold standard.¹⁶⁸ Another theory draws upon a March 1933 Daily Express headline that read, “Judea Declared War on Germany.” The article is about a proposed economic boycott of Germany by international Jewish leaders in response to German persecution of its Jews, but it has been used as a basis for casting Jews as the aggressors against Germany.¹⁶⁹

The perpetrator-as-victim mentality has given rise to an interesting twist on Holocaust revisionism in Germany, where Holocaust denial and Nazi symbols are forbidden under law. The phenomenon is called secondary antisemitism, which is based on German resentment of Jews who remind them of their collective guilt for the Holocaust.¹⁷⁰ In the 1968 book Post-Mortem: The Jews in Germany Today, German-Jewish journalist Hilde Walter described to author Leo Katcher what it was like for her to live in a post-war Germany. Walter was a secular Jew who considered herself a German first and was never a practicing Jew before the war. Hitler, she told Katcher, made her a Jew, and the Jews who remained in Germany after World War II were a “national monument” whose continued presence in Germany was an act of “mercy” without which “Germans would not be able to live with their guilt feelings.”¹⁷¹ That guilt had a negative effect on Germans, according to Walter, who then introduced the basis for what would become known as secondary antisemitism:

It seems the Germans will never forgive us Auschwitz. That is their sickness and they desperately want a cure. But they want it to be easy, painless. They refuse to go under the knife by facing up to the past and their part in it.¹⁷²

Walter alludes to the notion that Jews provide a reminder to Germans of their culpability, which they would rather forget. This consequently breeds German resentment of Jews for simply remaining in Germany.

Today, Germany continues to pay reparations to elderly Holocaust survivors around the world through the Conference on Jewish Material Claims Against Germany (a.k.a. the Claims Conference). Since its inception in 1952, the Claims Conference has negotiated with Germany and Austria for more than $70 billion in compensation to more than 800,000 Holocaust victims. The Claims Conference continues to negotiate with these governments to provide care for aging victims around the world whose needs grow greater even as their numbers decrease.¹⁷³

The only country that has thus far refused to accept any culpability for the Holocaust has been Poland, home to Europe's largest Jewish population before the war. That population numbered more than three million—about 10 percent of the country's total—before the war and was almost entirely wiped out.¹⁷⁴ Jews who returned to Poland after the war found themselves victims of violence as they tried to resettle in their former towns. In 1968, the communist government in Poland classified Jews as enemies of the state, blaming them for all the economic and political problems plaguing the communist system. Approximately 20,000 Jews were expelled from Poland between 1968 and 1972.¹⁷⁵ Jewish property that was stolen by the Nazis fell into the hands of the communist government and was nationalized.¹⁷⁶ Survivor advocates have called for restitution of approximately $300 billion, the value of property seized under the Nazi and communist regimes.¹⁷⁷ Polish officials and nationalists argue that restitution would bankrupt Poland.¹⁷⁸

Calls for restitution have sparked a major antisemitic backlash in the country among Polish nationalists who accuse Jews of manipulating the Holocaust and minimizing Polish suffering under the Nazi regime. In May 2019, several thousand far-right activists marched in Poland after President Donald Trump signed into law the Justice for Uncompensated Survivors Today (JUST) Act, which requires the U.S. State Department to report to Congress on the compliance of 47 countries—including Poland—on the restitution of Jewish assets seized during and after World War II. The JUST Act is based on the 2009 Terezin Declaration, a non-binding agreement signed by 47 nations—including Poland and the United States—recognizing the need to provide care for and restitution to Nazi victims. One Polish protester complained to France 24 that “Americans only think about Jewish and not Polish interests.”¹⁷⁹ Protests against the

JUST Act spread across the United States as well, with protesters calling Poland a victim of the so-called Holocaust industry.¹⁸⁰

The Far Right

A July 2019 report by E. Tendayi Achiume, the U.N. special rapporteur on contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia, and related intolerance concluded that antisemitism is on the rise among the far right. According to her findings, far-right antisemitism—and violent far-right antisemitism in particular—is on the rise across Europe.¹⁸¹

The Jewish Invaders and Domination

Neo-Nazi groups such as the National Socialist Movement and Combat 18 have openly espoused antisemitic positions, while far-right ethnonationalist groups such as Les Identitaires have applied historically antisemitic tropes to immigrants and other minority groups.¹⁸² Chief among these is the idea of the Jew as the outsider seeking to infiltrate society in order to destroy it from within. During the August 2017 Unite the Right rally in Charlottesville, Virginia, white nationalists marched through the streets chanting “Jews will not replace us!”¹⁸³ Robert Bowers, who murdered 11 people during the October 2018 attack at Pittsburgh’s Tree of Life synagogue, accused the Hebrew Immigrant Aid Society (HIAS)—a Jewish refugee aid organization—of bringing foreign invaders into the United States.¹⁸⁴ On March 15, 2019, Brenton Tarrant attacked two mosques in Christchurch, New Zealand, killing 51.¹⁸⁵ Tarrant also believed he was defending the white race from invading immigrants.

This philosophy is known as the Great Replacement theory, which postulates that non-European migrants threaten to replace the dominant white European culture.¹⁸⁶ Tarrant entitled his manifesto “The Great Replacement” and wrote about the “crisis of mass immigration ... that, if not combated, will ultimately result in the complete racial and cultural replacement of the European people.”¹⁸⁷ Tarrant and white-nationalist groups have attempted to define a broader white European ethnic identity prevalent in the Western world that transcends national borders. They believe that that identity is threatened by non-European invaders who want to uproot the dominant culture and implant their own. Tarrant focused his hatred on Muslims, but others like Bowers have included Jews as part of the perceived foreign threat.

Protocols of the Learned Elders of Zion have gained international prominence among the far right.

Far-right protesters marched through Poland in November 2017 on the occasion of the country's independence day to, as one protester told the media, "remove Jewry from power."¹⁸⁸ At the 2013 meeting of the World Jewish Congress in Budapest, the neo-fascist Hungarian political party Jobbik protested what it called a Jewish attempt to buy Hungary. According to Jobbik Parliamentarian Marton Gyongyosi, Hungary had "become subjugated to Zionism, it has become a target of colonisation while we, the indigenous people, can play only the role of extras."¹⁸⁹ Then-Jobbik leader Gabor Vona decried "Israeli conquerors, these investors, should look for another country in the world for themselves because Hungary is not for sale."¹⁹⁰

Created in 2003, Jobbik has made antisemitism an inextricable part of its platform. Jobbik believes that its fundamental purpose is the protection of "Hungarian values."¹⁹¹ The movement directly links Jews to the communist occupation of Hungary after World War II, on which Jobbik blames Hungary's economic and cultural decline. Groups like Jobbik present historical figures such as Karl Marx and Leon Trotsky¹⁹² as proof that communism is an inherently Jewish invention. Further, they view communism as part of an older, global Jewish plot to gain domination—first locally and then nationally and internationally.

The Far Right Redefines Who is a Jew

To promote the idea of Jews as invaders, the far right and white nationalists have to define who is a Jew. According to Jewish religious law, anyone born of a Jewish mother is Jewish regardless of practice or belief. The far right has long assigned a racial component to Jewish identity to create a visible enemy through easily identifiable racial features, such as the hook nose. The Nazi regime made Jewish identity completely reliant on genetics and declared that anyone with three or more Jewish grandparents—on either side—to be Jewish.¹⁹³ This genetic definition served the purpose of keeping Jews in the role of outsiders—even assimilated secular Jews who married gentiles were still considered Jews. Beliefs can be changed but if Jews are a distinct race, they are always Jews.

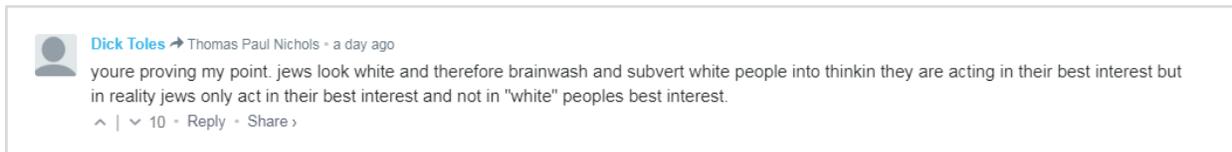

The modern far right has embraced this idea of a separate Jewish race made up of ersatz whites who are attempting to subvert the European white race. To the far right, it is this ability to “pass” that makes Jews even more dangerous. James Mason, the American neo-Nazi author of the anthology Siege, has argued that Jesus led a split between the white Jews and non-white Jews. According to Mason, the white race is the remnants of the true Israelites who became Christians.¹⁹⁴ Jews, according to Mason, “are the spearhead of this traitorous drive to subvert and to sell out our people.”¹⁹⁵ In

The Jews-as-a-separate-race argument actually received a legal boost in 2018 from a Louisiana court that ruled Jews were a race, though the court’s intentions were not to lift the arguments of white supremacists. Citing racial discrimination, Joshua Bonadona had filed a civil lawsuit that February against his alma mater, the Baptist institution Louisiana College, after he was passed over for an assistant football coach position because of what college president Rick Brewer allegedly called Bonadada’s “Jewish blood,” according to the complaint. Bonadona had been born to a Jewish mother and grew up practicing Judaism but converted to Christianity in college. His argument, thus, was based on his racial heritage rather than the religion of which he no longer considered himself a part.¹⁹⁷

The college denied that Jews constituted a race and so were not protected under racial discrimination laws. U.S. Magistrate Mark Hornsby ruled later in 2018 that Jews did, in fact, merit protection under Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, which specifically forbids employers from discriminating based on sex, race, or religion. The case was the first time in U.S. legal history that Jews had specifically been granted legal protection as a race under the Civil Rights Act.¹⁹⁸ According to Hornsby's decision:

Jewish citizens have been excluded from certain clubs or neighborhoods, and they have been denied jobs and other opportunities based on the fact that they were Jewish, with no particular concern as to a given individual's religious leanings. Thus, they have been treated like a racial or ethnic group that Title VII was designed to protect from employment discrimination based on membership in that group.¹⁹⁹

However, some legal and civil rights activists also warned that white supremacists would use the ruling as proof Jews are a distinct—and inherently inferior—race.²⁰⁰ The far right maintains the distinction of Jews as a separate race altogether in order to justify acts of violence against them in defense of the white race, as Bowers did when he blamed Jews for a white genocide.²⁰¹ As with the Church-sponsored religious antisemitism of the past, violent far-right antisemitism is viewed as defensive in the interests of protecting the white race from Jewish attack. Horrific acts like the Tree of Life shooting are justifiable if one is led by the misguided belief that such violence is a response to genocide. And with encouragement from ideologues like Mason, violent antisemitism will surely remain a permanent staple of the far right.

The Left

In a 1973 piece for the American Jewish Congress, Israeli Foreign Minister Abba Eban accused “the new left” of responsibility for a “new antisemitism” that accepts “the right to establish and maintain an independent national sovereign state is the prerogative of all nations, so long as they happen not to be Jewish.”²⁰² French President Emmanuel Macron labeled anti-Zionism as “a reinvention of anti-Semitism” during a July 2017 commemoration of the Nazi roundup of Jews in France.²⁰³ This “new” antisemitism has come to represent modern left-wing antisemitism, which has branded the Jewish nation-state a symbol of colonialism and oppression.

While the far right’s antisemitism is overt and thus easy to identify and condemn, the left and far left have embraced antisemitism by blurring the line between anti-Zionism and antisemitism. The antisemitism of the far left holds that oppressive Zionists and Israel, the Jewish nation-state, symbolize colonialism and oppression. The International

Holocaust Remembrance Alliance (IHRA) specifically notes that criticism of Israel is not in itself antisemitic, but specifically targeting Israel with standards that are not universally applied, comparing Israeli actions to those of the Nazis, holding Jews collectively responsible for Israeli government policies, and claiming Israel's very existence is racist are all manifestations of antisemitism.²⁰⁴

Israel, Social Justice, and Oppression

Beth Hillel Temple in Kenosha, Wisconsin, is a liberal Reform synagogue whose rabbi has spoken out against white privilege and police brutality. In June 2020, the synagogue signed onto an interfaith letter supporting peaceful protest and condemning societal racism. Despite embracing values promoted on the liberal left, the synagogue fell victim to left-wing attack that August when vandals targeted the Jewish house of worship as a representative of Israeli policies by graffitiing "Free Palestine" on the building.²⁰⁵

Left-wing antisemitism is often not as overt as it is on the far right, where neo-Nazi groups outwardly display a hatred of Jews. Modern left-wing antisemitism is, oddly enough, largely driven by a quest for social justice. Traditionally, the Jewish community has been drawn to left-wing ideology and causes because of the idea of tikkun olam—the concept of repairing the world. Nonetheless, the left has mainstreamed strands of antisemitism through its embrace of social justice causes. Israel—and its supporters—has become a favored target among the far left because of its control of lands

Palestinians claim for their own state. While there is certainly space for legitimate criticism of Israeli policies, the IHRA recognizes the delegitimization of the state itself as a form of antisemitism. The Working Definition of Antisemitism specifically classifies the following behaviors regarding Israel as examples of antisemitism:

- Denying the Jewish people their right to self-determination, e.g., by claiming that the existence of a State of Israel is a racist endeavor.
- Applying double standards by requiring of Israel a behavior not expected or demanded of any other democratic nation.
- Using the symbols and images associated with classic antisemitism (e.g., claims of Jews killing Jesus or blood libel) to characterize Israel or Israelis.
- Drawing comparisons of contemporary Israeli policy to that of the Nazis.
- Holding Jews collectively responsible for actions of the state of Israel.²⁰⁶

A debate has since emerged over whether the IHRA definition threatens legitimate criticism of Israel. In April 2021, some 200 academics signed on to the Jerusalem Declaration on Antisemitism (JDA), which declares: “Antisemitism is discrimination, prejudice, hostility or violence against Jews as Jews (or Jewish institutions as Jewish).”²⁰⁷ The JDA submits that “while antisemitism has certain distinctive features, the fight against it is inseparable from the overall fight against all forms of ...

discrimination.”²⁰⁸ The JDA recognizes that blaming all Jews for the actions of the Jewish state, denying the right of Jews to live in Israel, and assuming dual loyalty of non-Israeli Jews to Israel are all antisemitic, but legitimizes specific criticism and boycotts of Israel, as well as seeking alternative solutions to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict that would limit or eliminate the state’s Jewish character.²⁰⁹ The definition has been welcomed by some scholars and Israel advocates while condemned by others. Evyatar Friesel, professor emeritus of modern Jewish history at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, argued the JDA is “fundamentally biased” and paints Israel as the aggressor in the Middle East.²¹⁰ Dave Rich, director of policy for the United Kingdom’s Community Security Trust, criticized the JDA for limiting its definition to hatred of “Jews as Jews,” thereby excusing blatantly antisemitic language and tropes that do not specifically reference the target’s Jewishness.²¹¹

A popular mantra on the left is that it rejects Zionism and the State of Israel, not Jews as a whole. Left-wing groups such as Act Now to Stop War and End Racism (ANSWER) Coalition—which otherwise promotes ideals that liberal Jews would likely would find themselves in agreement with—have furthered the de-legitimization of the State of Israel by painting it as racist and colonialist.²¹² The anti-Israel website Electronic Intifada, for example, has accused “Israel and its lobby groups” of trying to “inoculate

Israel against criticism by obscuring the line between anti-Jewish bigotry, on the one hand, and criticism of Israel and its state ideology Zionism, on the other.²¹³ But the reality is that otherwise left-leaning Jews are forced to separate their Jewish identities from their liberal values and choose between the false dichotomy of being liberal or being Zionist. Just as the social justice-embracing Beth Hillel Temple was targeted as a representative of the Jewish state, left-wing antisemitism equates even modest affiliation with Israel with support for the oppression of the Palestinians.

In June 2017, for example, organizers of the Dyke March in Chicago told Jewish would-be participants that they were forbidden from carrying the Jewish Pride flag—a Star of David against a rainbow backdrop—because it too closely resembled the Israeli flag and would upset other marchers.²¹⁴ Later that month, the Chicago Dyke March posted a statement on Facebook pledging its “undying solidarity with Palestine and our Palestinian comrades.”²¹⁵

In October 2021, a proposed voting rights rally was enveloped in controversy after one of the participating organizations issued statements condemning the participation of pro-Israel Jewish organizations. The Freedom to Vote rally was organized by Declaration for American Democracy, a coalition of 230 faith-based and secular groups focused on voting reform. Sunrise DC, the Washington, D.C., branch of youth-led climate organization Sunrise Movement, issued a statement declining a speaking spot at the rally because of the participation of the National Council of Jewish Women, the Reform

However, the group also emphasized its continuing commitment to "stand against Zionism, antisemitism, anti-Palestinian racism, and all other forms of oppression."²¹⁸ The D.C. chapter of the Black Lives Matter organization praised Sunrise DC's stance in a since-deleted tweet that the original statement "wasn't antisemitic, no matter how many times oppressors want to repeat it."²¹⁹

This forced separation of Zionist and non-Zionist Jews has obvious historical parallels. European Jews who abandoned their religious practices and embraced secularism in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries were granted access to political, economic, and social circles, while those who clung to tradition remained outsiders. This modern form of antisemitism is again creating a distinction between "good Jews" and "bad Jews."

Support for Israel becomes a litmus test for inclusion in liberal causes that otherwise have nothing to do with Israel.

This devotion to social justice has given rise to certain celebrities on the left who promote antisemitism as they champion just causes. Some left-wing groups have become bedfellows with blatantly antisemitic organizations out of a sense of shared oppression. The Women’s March, for example, has had to issue multiple explanations of its leadership’s affiliation with the Nation of Islam and its leader, Louis Farrakhan, who has made numerous vicious antisemitic statements over the course of several decades. On February 25, 2018, Women’s March co-president Tamika Mallory attended the Nation of Islam’s annual Saviour’s Day conference, during which Farrakhan announced “the powerful Jews are my enemy” and declared Jews to be false Jews belonging to the “synagogue of Satan” who have wrought destruction “everywhere they have gone.”²²⁰

Mallory had previously posted a photo of herself alongside Farrakhan in May 2017 and referred to him as “the GOAT”—Greatest Of All Time.²²¹ Following her appearance at the Saviour’s Day event, just three months after Farrakhan declared that he’s not an antisemite but an “anti-termite,” Mallory refused to condemn Farrakhan’s record of antisemitic statements.²²² The Women’s March released a statement in March 2018 that Farrakhan’s statements about “Jewish, queer, and trans people are not aligned with the Women’s March Unity Principles, which were created by women of color leaders and are grounded in Kingian Nonviolence.” The statement went on to repeat the

This form of left-wing antisemitism is increasingly dangerous because it has seeped into the culture of the political left, which makes it both less transparent and more acceptable to those who deeply care about the otherwise just causes being promoted. For example, U.S. Representative Ilhan Omar deployed overt antisemitic canards while lambasting the influence of political lobbies—arguments she certainly could have made without allusions to Jewish power and money controlling the government. In calling for an economic and cultural boycott of Israel, U.S. Representative Rashida Tlaib of Michigan likened boycotting Israel to boycotting Nazi Germany, comparing the Jewish nation-state to the Nazi regime that had attempted to destroy the Jews.²²⁹ Piotr Cywiński, director of the Auschwitz-Birkenau State Museum, clarified the issue for a Washington Post columnist in August 2019, saying that hatred of Israel is just a mask for hatred of Jews.²³⁰

Antisemitism on Campus

Antisemitism on the university level has taken on a new dimension in the twenty-first century as Jewish students have found themselves targeted not because of their religion specifically, but because of links—whether real or only perceived—to the Jewish State of Israel. A 2005 report by the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights found that the American campus had become increasingly hostile to Jewish students as antisemitism “is often cloaked as criticism of Israel.”²³¹ The commission found evidence that federally funded ideologically biased campus programs were spurring some antisemitic incidents on campus.²³² According to the ADL, the American university has “emerged as one of the major sites for the expression and dissemination of anti-Semitism.”²³³ While only 20 percent of respondents in the American Jewish Committee’s 2019 Survey of American Jews on Anti-Semitic Attitudes said that they experienced antisemitism on campus within the past five years, 36 percent responded that campuses had become more hostile to pro-Israel students since the year before.²³⁴ A July 2020 report by the U.S. nonprofit Amcha Initiative noted a decrease in traditional antisemitism on campus but recorded increases in the denigration, suppression, and exclusion of Jewish students based on attitudes toward Israel.²³⁵

The delegitimization of Israel has resulted in the harassment of and even violence against Jewish students on college campuses across the United States by left-wing groups that claim to pursue social justice and have led harassment campaigns against Jewish students regardless of their support for Israel. In April 2019, for example, members of the Emory University chapter of Students for Justice in Palestine (SJP) posted fake eviction notices on the doors of Jewish students in Emory's residence halls and off-campus housing. The notices were a protest against Israeli demolitions of Palestinian homes. Emory Jewish groups stated that they did not have "explicit evidence" that the notices specifically singled out Jewish students, but it appears that the sole qualification for receiving a notice was to be identifiably Jewish.²³⁶ Emory's Office of Residence and Housing Approval reportedly approved the SJP activity.²³⁷ Following a public outcry against Emory SJP, the group called for a boycott of Jewish groups on campus, including Hillel and Chabad, which they accused of leading a smear campaign against the group.²³⁸ SJP has posted similar notices at New York University, Harvard, Florida Atlantic University, and others.²³⁹

SJP's actions deliberately targeted Jewish students, regardless of their support for Israel. On other campuses, Israeli and Jewish students have reported harassment by SJP and similar groups. A 2012 ADL report documented a decade's worth of antisemitism at the University of California, Irvine, which the ADL primarily blamed on the Muslim Student Union (MSU). For example, in May 2007, the MSU organized a

Holocaust Memorial Week, featuring a speaker who blamed Jewish bankers for the slave trade.²⁴⁰

Campus leftists have vociferously rejected any relationship between antisemitism and anti-Zionism. These student groups deny they are antisemitic, instead arguing they are combating the oppressive nature of modern Zionism. For example, the student government at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign passed a resolution in October 2019 distinguishing between anti-Zionism and antisemitism.²⁴¹ Yet the actions of these campus groups collectively hold all Jews responsible for the actions of the Israeli government.

While the far right has been largely responsible for recent violent antisemitism in the United States, the far left has also been responsible for promoting antisemitic agendas, if not directly driving violence. Antifa and other far-left activists have been linked to violence on university campuses during protests against visiting Israeli officials and in support of the Boycott, Divestment, Sanctions (BDS) campaign against Israel, which seeks a cultural and economic boycott of the state.²⁴²

A December 2019 report by StopAntisemitism.org and Zachor Legal Institute concluded that BDS “directly drives anti-Semitism and radicalizes public discourse in Western democracies.”²⁴³ Its authors also found an overlap between BDS and far-right rhetoric, which they deemed “an increasingly public intellectual and philosophical alliance between the BDS movement and far-right groups.”²⁴⁴

While those on the far-left have used antisemitic rhetoric and tactics, antisemitism is not universal to these movements. Unlike far-right groups, far-left movements lack well-established hierarchies and organizational structures, which means there are also no specific unifying philosophies or tactics. One group of antifa activists may act fundamentally differently from another.

Jews who themselves identify as antifa deny that the movement is inherently antisemitic. Daniel Sieradski, who has been called “Antifa’s most prominent Jew,” told the Jewish Telegraphic Agency (JTA) in 2017 that the spirit of antifa is “to challenge racists when they come into your community and try to incite hatred and violence.”²⁴⁵ Sieradski told JTA that Jews are welcomed in antifa because antifa is fighting Nazis and antisemitism “is the prime ideological viewpoint of Nazis.”²⁴⁶

Specific Jewish antifa groups have also formed. In January 2019, a group called Jewish Antifascist Action vandalized a plaque in New York City's Canyon of Heroes honoring World War I French general Philippe Petain. Petain went on to lead France's Vichy regime and oversaw the deportation of more than 75,000 French Jews to Nazi concentration camps.²⁴⁷ The Canadian Jewish News (CJN) interviewed three members about antifa views on Jews and Israel, and each responded differently. The commonality was that all three felt safe and welcome as Jews within the antifa movement. Views on Israel varied, with some calling it fascist and others saying it's not. One Jewish antifa member said that Jews do tend to avoid antifa events because they feel antifa is demanding that all Jews abandon Israel. That same activist told CJN that "Nazis support the State of Israel" because they use the example of a Jewish ethno-state to argue that whites should also have their own ethno-state and Jews expelled from this ethno-state could just go to Israel.²⁴⁸

The left, and the far left in particular, have coalesced around the idea of defending those living under oppression. Anti-Zionism itself is not inherently antisemitism. There are, of course, anti-Zionist Jews who do not believe that a state of Israel should exist without the coming of the messiah or who lament the secularized nature of the modern Israeli state. But, as recognized by the IHRA, anti-Zionism becomes antisemitic when it is driven by the specific notion that Jews are the only group not entitled to a state of their own. Those on the left and the far left have found their antisemitic rhetoric is more palatable when coating it with the patina of anti-Zionism. Groups like SJP and the Women's March believe themselves to be proponents of human rights, defending victims of oppression while targeting all Jews regardless of their support for the policies of the State of Israel.

Antisemitism in U.S. Black Communities

In a 1967 essay for the New York Times, African American author and activist James Baldwin wrote that Blacks were antisemitic because they were anti-white. For Blacks in New York City in the 1960s, many of their landlords and employers were Jewish and Jews came to represent the system that was systemically unfair to Black people. “The root of anti-Semitism among Negroes is, ironically, the relationship of colored peoples--all over the globe--to the Christian world,” he wrote.²⁴⁹ According to Baldwin’s interpretations, despite their long history of persecution, Jews had not only become accepted in America, they had become comfortable and thus shared the status of the white Christians who continued to degrade the Black community:

*In the American context, the most ironical thing about Negro anti-Semitism is that the Negro is really condemning the Jew for having become an American white man--for having become, in effect, a Christian. The Jew profits from his status in America, and he must expect Negroes to distrust him for it. The Jew does not realize that the credential he offers, the fact that he has been despised and slaughtered, does not increase the Negro’s understanding. It increases the Negro’s rage.*²⁵⁰

Decades later, Baldwin’s observation of Jews as a stand-in for the American white man because of their successful integration into American society continues to resonate and contribute to the promulgation of antisemitism in the Black community. And as the American Black community gained equality, its relationship with the Jewish community has become more tenuous as many in the Black community—as Baldwin described—equated successful Jewish integration in America with shared Jewish responsibility for Black oppression. Among the many who helped shape the Black nationalist scene in the 1980s and 1990s, the Reverend Jesse Jackson and the Minister Louis Farrakhan stand out in particular for advancing an adversarial relationship between the Black and Jewish communities.

Farrakhan took over the leadership of the Black nationalist-religious movement Nation of Islam in 1977.²⁵¹ In 1979, Jackson allegedly said he was “sick and tired” of hearing about the Holocaust, and Jews didn’t have a “monopoly on suffering.”²⁵² Allegations of antisemitism continued as Jackson ran for the 1984 Democratic presidential nomination. In a January 1984 interview with the Washington Post, Jackson referred to New York City by the antisemitic slur Hymietown.²⁵³ Jackson later apologized,²⁵⁴ but Farrakhan defended the slur, labeled Judaism a “gutter religion,” and designated supporters of Israel as criminals in the eyes of God. Jackson condemned Farrakhan’s remarks as “reprehensible” and accused him of dividing the Democratic Party,²⁵⁵ but Farrakhan continued on to become a symbol of Black pride in America, organizing events such as 1995's Million Man March in Washington, D.C.²⁵⁶ At the same time, he earned a reputation for making anti-white and antisemitic comments.²⁵⁷ For many young African Americans coming of age in the 1980s and 1990s, Farrakhan's charisma and outspokenness—including his unveiled antisemitism—introduced them to Black pride.²⁵⁸

The Black-Jewish communal relationship reached a low point in August 1991 with the Crown Heights race riots. The motorcade of Rabbi Menachem Mendel Schneerson, leader of the Chabad-Lubavitch Hasidic group, accidentally struck two Black children in Brooklyn, New York, on August 19, killing one. Hours later, Australian yeshiva student Yankel Rosenbaum was pulled from his car in Brooklyn and stabbed to death by 16-year-old Lemrick Nelson. That attack was the start of three days that became known as the Crown Heights Riots, during which rioters burnt and looted businesses, homes, and cars owned by Orthodox Jews. Jews were physically attacked in the streets.²⁵⁹ Nelson was convicted of murdering Rosenbaum, but that conviction was overturned. He was later convicted of violating Rosenbaum's civil rights, for which he was sentenced to 10 years in prison. He was released after only one, however, because of time served for his overturned conviction for the murder.²⁶⁰

Friction between the Jewish and Black communities remained elevated in the twenty-first century. A 2013 ADL survey on antisemitic attitudes recorded an average of 22 percent of the U.S. African American population held antisemitic beliefs. That number had declined from 29 percent in 2011, 28 percent in 2009, and 25 percent in 2007.²⁶¹ Nonetheless, the study noted that while antisemitic “propensities” within the African American population were in decline, they continued “to be higher than the general population.”²⁶²

Violence would again mar the relationship between the two communities in 2019. On December 10, 2019, David Anderson and Francine Graham attacked the JC Kosher Supermarket in Jersey City, New Jersey, killing three. Anderson and Graham were subsequently killed during an hours-long shootout with police. Anderson previously belonged to the Black Hebrew Israelite movement, which has a history of engaging in racism and antisemitism.²⁶³

The Black Hebrew movement dates to nineteenth century America. The movement is based around the narrative that they are the true descendants of the ancient Israelites, while modern Jews are imposters. According to the narrative, the original 12 Tribes of Israel were divided by ethnic groups, which did not include whites. While the movement has subgroups that are more open to relations with mainstream Judaism, a particularly militant faction emerged in the 1960s calling themselves Black Israelites. This denomination began openly espousing racism toward white Jews. And this is the group to which Anderson at one point belonged.²⁶⁴

In recent years, several Black celebrities have visibly promoted and mainstreamed antisemitic stereotypes and conspiracy theories. In 2017, rapper Jay-Z drew criticism for a line in his song “The Story of O.J.”: “You wanna know what’s more important than throwin’ away money at a strip club? Credit. You ever wonder why Jewish people own all the property in America? This how they did it.”²⁶⁵ The following year, rapper 21 Savage apologized after creating controversy with his song lyric, “We been getting that Jewish money. Everything is kosher.”²⁶⁶ While these incidents raised some objections within the Black community, their continued use in pop culture indicates some level of wider acceptance. In 1989, hip hop artist Richard Griffin, a.k.a. Professor Griff of the group Public Enemy, called Jews evil and claimed to have proof during an interview with the Washington Times.²⁶⁷ During a July 2020 appearance on Nick Cannon’s podcast “Cannon’s Class,” Griffin said he was hated because he told the truth. Cannon agreed and declared Blacks were the true Hebrews.²⁶⁸ Cannon later apologized,²⁶⁹ but several Black celebrities defended his comments as well. Rapper Ice Cube and professional athletes DeSean Jackson, Larry Johnson, and Stephen Jackson made headlines that year for making blatant antisemitic comments or promoting antisemitic conspiracy theories.²⁷⁰ Some directly praised Farrakhan and cited him as their inspiration, demonstrating that Farrakhan’s decades of influence helped cement an antagonistic relationship between the Black and Jewish communities.

In July 2020, former basketball star Kareem Abdul-Jabbar condemned antisemitic comments by Black celebrities as an offense against all who seek social justice. “It’s so disheartening to see people from groups that have been violently marginalized do the same thing to others without realizing that perpetuating this kind of bad logic is what perpetuates racism,” he wrote.²⁷¹ Harkening back to Baldwin’s 1967 essay, Atlantic writer Jemele Hill wrote that some in the Black community have a “certain cultural blindspot about Jews,” while “stereotypical and hurtful tropes about Jews are widely accepted in the African American community.”²⁷²

These stereotypes have been long perpetuated in the community and can be seen at the core of worsening relations between the Black and Jewish communities. In her 2020 piece, Hill pointed to the prevalence of her parents’ generation repeating stereotypes of Jews’ obsession with money.²⁷³ In the 1960s, Al Vorspan, then director of the Commission on Social Action of Reform Judaism, observed that as Jews migrated to the suburbs, many Black-Jewish relationships in inner-city communities ceased to be neighborly and became transactional as tenant-landlord-tenant, merchant-customer, or social worker-client relationships. “These are inherently tense, unequal relations. They are fraught with conflict and resentment. Jews in the core neighborhoods are represented by landlords and pawnbrokers and small merchants,” he said.²⁷⁴ Both Vorspan and Baldwin cited the relational shift between African Americans and Jews from neighbors to moving parts of a larger system. And it is that system that Baldwin ultimately blamed: “The crisis taking place in the world, and in the minds and hearts of black men everywhere, is not produced by the star of David, but by the old, rugged Roman cross on which Christendom’s most celebrated Jew was murdered. And not by Jews.”²⁷⁵

Religion and Antisemitism

In November 2019, an unidentified man began screaming at a visibly Jewish family on London’s subway. The man accused Jews of murdering Jesus while holding up what appeared to be a Bible. When confronted by another passenger to stop his invective, he shouted, “It’s not my opinion. It’s God’s word.”²⁷⁶ The man was arrested days later for racially aggravated offenses after a video of the encounter went viral.²⁷⁷

The incident is evidence of how ingrained old stereotypes and hatreds can be. Just days before the incident in London, the Church of England took responsibility for the role of Christianity in perpetuating antisemitism over the centuries, eventually leading up to the Holocaust. According to a report by the Church’s Faith and Order Commission, “Christians have been guilty of promoting and fostering negative stereotypes of Jewish people that have contributed to grave suffering and injustice.”²⁷⁸ The Church of England and the Catholic Church made strides in the twentieth century to rectify historic antisemitic policies and declarations, but antisemitic attitudes based on centuries of religious indoctrination remain difficult to overcome.

Those like U.S. Pastor Steven Anderson, leader of the Arizona Faithful World Baptist Church, embrace classic Christian antisemitic tropes in their religious interpretations. Anderson has posted several videos on YouTube accusing Jews of being the anti-

Christ, killing Jesus, and being children of the devil.²⁷⁹ Ireland banned Anderson from the country in 2019,²⁸⁰ while Arab News named Anderson to a list of “Hate Preachers” that same year.²⁸¹ Demonstrating the continued power of antisemitic religious indoctrination, Evangelical Christian Luba Yanko told the Washington Post in August 2019 that U.S. President Donald Trump is trying to act on Christian values, but he is inundated with “Zionist” and “kabbalist” values.²⁸²

While acknowledging that some Jews pressed for Jesus’s crucifixion, the Catholic Church absolved Jews as a whole of responsibility for the death of Jesus with the publication in 1965 of Nostra Aetate.²⁸³ Offshoots of certain Christian denominations have continued to reject the reforms of Nostra Aetate, promulgating the narrative that blames Jews for deicide. Before John Earnest attacked a Chabad synagogue in Poway, California, on April 27, 2019, he penned a manifesto explaining his background as an evangelical Presbyterian Christian. He wrote that Jews deserved to die as they were responsible for killing Jesus and controlled the media. Killing Jews, Earnest wrote, would glorify God. Earnest belonged to the Orthodox Presbyterian Church, an evangelical offshoot meant to counter what it considers liberalization of the Presbyterian Church. Church, told the Washington Post that the church must take some responsibility as Earnest was “radicalized into white nationalism from within the very midst of our church.”²⁸⁴

The Washington Post also noted the opinions of others who felt the church should not have to take responsibility for Earnest’s actions, as he acted alone. Still others told the paper that the church bears the same responsibility to disavow Earnest as Muslim communities do when an Islamic extremist carries out an attack.²⁸⁵ While Christianity as a whole should not be held responsible for Earnest, just as Islam as a whole should not be held responsible for Islamist attacks, both religions must reconcile that elements of their religions have been and continue to be used by extremists to justify horrific crimes.

Within Islam, both religious leaders and Islamist radicals have interpreted passages within the Quran in a manner that ensures the continuation of antisemitism. Arab News also singled out Qatar-based Muslim Brotherhood ideologue Yusuf al-Qaradawi as a hate preacher because of, among other things, his repeated instigation of his followers to antisemitism and to the influence of numerous other radicals.²⁸⁶ During a 2005 address, for example, Qaradawi cited a particularly antisemitic hadith and exhorted his listeners to “continue to fight the Jews and they will fight you, until the Muslims will kill them. And the Jew will hide behind the stone and the tree, and the stone and the tree will say: 'Oh, servant of Allah, oh Muslim, this is a Jew behind me. Come and kill him!' The resurrection will not come before this happens."²⁸⁷

Qaradawi is but one of many modern Islamist clerics who overtly fold antisemitism into their theology. More than a decade after Qaradawi called the death of Jews necessary for the resurrection, an imam in Copenhagen issued a similar call. In March 2018, Mundhir Abdallah of the Masjid Al-Faruq mosque in Copenhagen said during a sermon that the Quran instructs followers to "fight the Jews and kill them."²⁸⁸ Abdullah al-Faisal is a U.S.-designated Islamist propagandist who has recruited for ISIS and facilitated travel to ISIS-held territory. The Counter Extremism Project (CEP) has documented dozens of extremists who have worked with or otherwise been influenced by Faisal. These include Garland, Texas, attacker Nadir Soofi, London Bridge attacker Khuram Shazad Butt, and British extremist Anjem Choudary. Faisal claimed he learned of The Protocols of the Learned Elders of Zion in university and subsequently recommended it as "an excellent source of knowledge."²⁸⁹ He has also accused Jews—not Israelis—of committing genocide and "playing the race card," while underlining his belief that "Hitler was right."²⁹⁰

Faisal's brand of propaganda demonstrates a willingness to accept long debunked conspiracy theories as factual. Both Qaradawi and Faisal have used antisemitism to create a singular enemy for Islam. The hadith Qaradawi referenced in 2005 tells of the end times and the need for Muslims to confront that enemy in order to fulfill prophecy.

As with Anderson’s likening of Jews to the devil, Qaradawi and Faisal are constructing a narrative that places Muslims on the side of the holy and Jews on the opposite side. Such a paradigm can then be used to excuse acts of violence—such as suicide bombings or Earnest’s attack on the Poway Chabad—as a venerable act against the enemies of God.

Such characterizations have provided justification for horrific terrorist acts by Islamist groups such as Hamas, the Palestinian offshoot of the Muslim Brotherhood. Hamas’s original 1988 charter reads: “Israel, Judaism and Jews challenge Islam and the Moslem people.”²⁹¹ The charter further accuses Jews of using their money to buy control of global media, while Article 22 specifically accuses Jews of responsibility for World War I and the destruction of the last Islamic caliphate, the Ottoman Empire.²⁹² The Hamas charter justifies its blatant antisemitism by drawing on sections of the Quran and the hadith, a collection of practices and philosophy attributed to Muhammad. In particular, the Hamas charter references a hadith necessitating an apocalyptic battle between Jews and Muslims to bring about the Day of Judgement:

The Day of Judgement will not come about until Moslems fight the Jews (killing the Jews), when the Jew will hide behind stones and trees. The stones and trees will say O Moslems, O Abdulla, there is a Jew behind me, come and kill him. Only the Gharkad tree, would not do that because it is one of the trees of the Jews.²⁹³

The hadith is the same one referenced by Qaradawi in 2005, predicating the salvation of Muslims and God's final judgement of humanity following the defeat of the Jews. Qaradawi himself was a student of Muslim Brotherhood ideologue Sayyid Qutb. And as a Muslim Brotherhood offshoot, Hamas is also faithful to Qutb's writings. Hamas's charter essentially rephrases a passage in Qutb's book Ma'rakutuna ma'a al-Yahud, "Our Struggle Against the Jews," in which Qutb argues that Jews "stand behind" the "war waged against Islam...which persists against the Islamic revival in all places on earth."²⁹⁴ Though Hamas's leadership protests that its fight is with only Israel and not Jews as a whole, antisemitism has permeated the Gaza Strip since Hamas took control in 2007. And although this antisemitism is rooted in the religious justifications provided by Islamist clerics such as Qutb, it also draws on historical tropes and conspiracies that lend support to the initial religion-based claims.

Hamas released an updated version of its charter in May 2017 that removed overtly antisemitic passages and references to Jews. Hamas leaders explained that their fight was against Israel, not against the Jewish people. However, Hamas leaders also stated that the new charter is not a replacement for the original document, which remained in effect.²⁹⁵

Similar hadiths to the tree story have also appeared in official state sources in Islamic nations. In the aftermath of the September 11, 2001, attacks and the revelation that 15 of the 19 hijackers were Saudi citizens, U.S. media outlets reported that extremist language in Saudi textbooks may have helped fuel radicalism in the country.

Saudi officials have worked in the ensuing years to overhaul the educational system. In 2015, the Saudi education ministry banned books by Qutb, Qaradawi, and Brotherhood founder Hassan al-Banna.²⁹⁶

Conclusion

Throughout history, Jews have been denied standing and power. They have been restricted professionally, forced to wear identifying clothing, forced to live in specific areas, and generally made subservient to the whims of the ruling class.

In a politically polarized United States, it has become common to hear those on the right and the left accuse one another of presenting the greatest danger. In fact, both sides are dangerous. By attacking the legitimacy of the Jewish nation-state in the form of anti-Zionism and targeting all Jews as representatives of Israel, the left targets the Jewish way of life. Conversely, the far right is largely responsible for targeting Jewish life itself through violent attacks, such as the 2018 assault on Pittsburgh's Tree of Life synagogue. Voices on both sides of the political spectrum are quick to absolve themselves of the actions of a few, but extremism coming from either side warrants alarm.

Both ideologies rely on the promotion of old stereotypes. For one side to argue that the other side is far more antisemitic, however, is dismissive of the larger problem. In reality, both ends of the spectrum have employed antisemitic rhetoric and tactics that slowly but surely legitimizes antisemitism.

The commonality among antisemitism on the far left, the far right, radical Islamism, and Christian antisemitism is a manufactured fear of perceived Jewish power and the need to defend against it. This underlying theme is present among all forms of antisemitism. Historically, it was easy to assign blame to a powerless and nomadic group. Charging Jews with responsibility for society's ills alleviated responsibility from those with actual power—and, more importantly, it distracted the general population from holding those in power responsible.

As Jews began to gain a modicum of freedom, the historical scapegoat became even a larger target. Jews were the easy answer to every stubborn problem: Uncertainty in global financial markets, the rise of communism, or Hollywood undermining morality. But the core of modern antisemitism is primarily based on a fear of perceived Jewish power and strength. The Jew is the enemy that needs to be defended against. The Jew is controlling and influencing the system and thus responsible for the ills of the world. For those who feel insecure in their current place in the modern world, and especially for those who wish to manipulate unease in order to gain power, the Jew continues to be a convenient target.
