Overview

Executive Summary:

Al-Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM) is a jihadist terrorist group based in North Africa. As a formal al-Qaeda affiliate, the group is dedicated to dismantling regional governments and implementing sharia (Islamic law) in areas where it operates, primarily in Algeria, Mali, Mauritania, Libya, Tunisia, and Niger. In December 2015, AQIM linked up with its former offshoot, al-Mourabitoun, to carry out attacks throughout the Sahel region. The groups carried out a series of deadly terrorist attacks, including the November 2015 attacks in Mali, the January 2016 attacks in Burkina Faso, and the March 2016 attacks in Côte d'Ivoire.¹

On March 2, 2017, AQIM merged with local Salafist groups Ansar al-Dine and al-Mourabitoun to form Jamaat Nusrat al-Islam wal Muslimeen (JNIM), led by Iyad Ag Ghali, Ansar al-Dine's former emir.² While operating under a new name and new emir, JNIM appears to remain under the direction of AQIM and AQ central. Ghali pledged allegiance to both al-Qaeda central and AQIM emir Abu Musab Abdul Wadoud.³ In 2017, al-Qaeda-linked groups were responsible for 276 attacks in Mali and West Africa, comparable to the number of attacks its affiliated groups launched in 2016.⁴

Al-Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM)

AQIM finds its roots in the Armed Islamic Group (GIA), an Islamist movement founded in Algeria in the early 1990s. GIA leader Hassan Hattab split from the GIA over ideological differences, and he later founded the Salafist Group for Preaching and Combat (GSPC). In September 2006, GSPC merged with al-Qaeda, formally rebranding itself as AQIM in the months following. In Mali, AQIM is known for its de facto war with the French government beginning in 2013, as well as its extensive history of kidnapping and extortion.⁵

Doctrine:

AQIM aligns its movement with al-Qaeda's broader goals to institute sharia (Islamic law) in all its areas of operation. Then-leader Abdelmalek Droukdel told the New York Times in 2008 that "Our first goal is the arbitration of the Lord of the world's law [Sharia], and the achievement of the servitude to God. Our general goals are the same goals of Al Qaeda the mother, and you know them."⁶

AQIM perceives all non-Islamist governments as illegitimate and, accordingly, seeks to replace the various governments in the countries in which AQIM operates. According to Droukdel, these governments "are all secretions of the colonialism that invaded our country in the last two centuries, and enabled those regimes to govern. Therefore, they started governing for its account and on behalf of it. They implement its programs and protect its interests and fight Islam on its behalf."⁷ Moreover, the group specifically targets what it sees as continued Western influence in the region. According to Droukdel, "We seek to liberate the Islamic Maghreb from the sons of France and Spain and from all symbols of treason and employment for the outsiders, and protect it from the foreign greed and the crusader's hegemony."⁸ Regarding attacks on American interests, Droukdel said that, "We will strive to strike them whenever we can."⁹

Organizational Structure:

Like all al-Qaeda outfits, AQIM has a distinct hierarchy, with a leader or emir at its head. The former emir was Abdelmalouk Droukdel. AQIM also has a central decision-making body, the Majlis al-Ayan (Council of Notables),¹⁰ its own media wing, Al-Andalus Media Productions, and a Sharia Council that governs Islamic legal matters.¹¹ French troops killed Droukdel in Mali on June 4, 2020.¹² On November 21, 2020, AQIM released a video that showed the body of its former leader while also announcing Abu Ubaydah Yusef al-Anabi—the former leader of AQIM's Council of Notables—as the group's new leader.¹³

After al-Mourabitoun re-joined AQIM in 2015, al-Qaeda leader Ayman al-Zawahiri allegedly ordered a regional division among his commanders. Droukdel was placed in charge of Algeria, al-Mourabitoun leader Mokhtar Belmokhtar of Libya, and Djame Okacha (a.k.a. Abu Yahya al-Hammam) of West Africa.¹⁴ The Tunisian branch of AQIM has carried out a series of attacks in recent years, particularly in Tunisia's Kasserine region.¹⁵ This regional division reflects the early organization of AQIM, which was divided in katibas (brigades) that both cooperated and competed with each other.¹⁶

In March 2017, AQIM announced the formation of Jamaat Nusrat al-Islam wal Muslimeen (JNIM) in a merger that included Ansar al-Dine and al-Mourabitoun. JNIM announced Ansar al-Dine's former emir, Iyad Ag Ghali, as its leader.¹⁷ Ghali claimed that the factions had united "into one group" operating under "one emir" after al-Qaeda "sought unification according to Sharia law."¹⁸ While operating under a new name and new emir, JNIM appears to remain under the aegis of al-Qaeda. Ghali paid bayat (allegiance) to al-Qaeda central and AQIM emir Abu Musab Abdul Wadoud.¹⁹ Thus, the relationship between AQIM and Ansar al-Dine and al-Mourabitoun has shifted from one of collaboration to a structured hierarchy with AQIM at the top.²⁰

Financing:

AQIM acquires a significant portion of its funding through kidnapping and extortion.²¹ The State Department's 2013 Country Reports on Terrorism noted that, in addition to kidnapping for ransom, the group also engages in criminal activities to finance its operations. Specifically, AQIM reportedly raises funds through "protection rackets, robbery, people and arms trafficking, money laundering and smuggling and increasingly, the facilitation of drug trafficking from South America into Europe."²² Lastly, AQIM also successfully fundraises globally. This includes supporters residing in Western Europe, who "provide limited financial and logistical support."²³

AQIM is also allegedly supported by foreign governments. According to the Anti-Defamation League, "The Algerian government has accused Iran and Sudan of funding the group. Al Qaeda also provides material and financial support to AQIM. In addition, AQIM has many members abroad, the majority located in Western Europe, who provide financial and logistical support.”²⁴

Recruitment:

An April 2007 report by Lianne Boudali of West Point’s Combating Terrorism Center suggested that the GSPC merged with al-Qaeda in part due to declining recruitment. Rebranding as AQIM and broadening their focus outside of Algeria and Tunisia made it easier for the group to recruit informants, logisticians, and militants.²⁵ As part of this plan, GSPC trained and sent fighters to join Abu Musab al-Zarqawi—then the leader of al-Qaida in Iraq—in 2005.²⁶ The increased scope and scale of attacks after 2007 suggests that AQIM successfully recruited some of these Iraqi fighters after Zarqawi’s death.²⁷

As AQIM shifted its focus away from Algeria and toward the more vulnerable west African countries of Mali, Niger, and Côte d’Ivoire, it increased its recruitment efforts within these countries. By 2016, Malians had reportedly replaced Algerians as the most prominent nationality within the group.²⁸ This change is visible in the March 2016 beach resort attack in Côte d’Ivoire, in which all of the terrorists involved were sub-Saharan Africans.²⁹

Training:

Most of AQIM’s leadership first trained alongside Osama bin Laden during the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.³⁰ In the mid-2000s, GSPC trained recruits in the desert in temporary bivouacs which they moved after a few days.³¹ However in 2006 reports emerged suggesting that AQIM had sent men to train with Hezbollah in Lebanon.³² By the late 2000s, AQIM began training Boko Haram fighters in the construction of IEDs.³³ According to internal documents seized from bin Laden’s compound, AQIM divides its training into two parts: “practical training and... theoretical training, which is less beneficial.”³⁴

History:

- June 26, 2024: The International Criminal Court (ICC) convicts AQIM and Ansar Dine member Al Hassan Ag Abdoul Aziz Ag Mohamed Ag Mahmoud of war crimes and crimes against humanity for acts committed between April 2, 2012, and January 29, 2013, in Timbuktu, Mali. After being recruited by AQIM senior leaders, Al Hassan became a senior member of the Islamic police where he helped the Islamic Court implement draconian judgments and sentences against civilians. Al Hassan is also charged with contributing to the crimes perpetrated by AQIM and Ansar Dine through his cooperation in the cruel treatment and torture of civilians. The ICC took custody of Al Hassan on March 31, 2018. His trial began on July 14, 2020. Al Hassan faces a maximum sentence of life imprisonment. - October 13, 2023: AQIM and Sahel-based al-Qaeda affiliate JNIM release a joint statement praising Hamas's October 7 attack on Israel, which killed approximately 1,200 people. In the statement, they congratulate Hamas on their actions and urge the terror group to continue its assault on Israel. They further claim that al-Qaeda's various factions are "racing against time" to reach Hamas and join its offensive to "fight the Jews and those who protect the Jews." - May 27, 2014 - : AQIM launches four attacks while French authorities prevent three more. On May 27, AQIM claims responsibility for killing four policemen during an attack on the home of Tunisia's interior minister. In June, the groups claim responsibility for two separate attacks on U.N. vehicles in Mali. On July 9, French authorities thwart an AQIM plot to target the Eiffel Tower, the Louvre, and a nuclear power plant in France. On August 16, a suicide bomber self-detonates on a patrol base in northern Mali, killing two and injuring nine.

During this time, a rift seems to emerge within AQIM over whether or not to pledge allegiance to ISIS in the wake of ISIS's declaration of a caliphate. - July 26, 2013 - April 20, 2014: AQIM militant activities shift to assassination and small ambushes. On July 26, 2013, Tunisian authorities accuse a jihadist cell linked to AQIM of assassinating opposition leader Mohamed Brahmî, as well as killing Chokri Belaid, another politician, in February. In November 2013, AQIM claims responsibility for kidnapping and murdering two French journalists, Ghislaine Dupont and Claude Verlon, in northern Mali. The group says that the journalists were killed because of French and African military crimes against Muslims and the Azawad region of Mali.
On April 20, 2014, several days after Algeria's presidential elections, AQIM ambushes Algerian soldiers who were returning from their voting stations near Tizi Ouzou, killing at least 14. - Fighting between militants and French forces escalates in Mali after militants from the AQIM-allied MUJAO seize the northern Mali town of Konna, which Reuters describes as "the last buffer between the rebels and Mopti...the main town in the region [which is] seen as the gateway to the country's north." The next day, France begins airstrikes in Mali to beat back the jihadists' advance toward the country's center. Several days later, the U.S. pledges military assistance to France and begins transporting French battalions and equipment from bases in France to Bamako, Mali. By the end of the month, French troops take control of Gao, the most populous city in northern Mali, as well as the ancient city of Timbuktu. - May 4, 2012 - December 20, 2012: AQIM is implicated in two attempted or completed terror attacks against French and U.S. personnel leading to increased military actions by Western countries against the group.
On May 4, France sentences French-Algerian particle physicist Said Hicheur to five years in prison for allegedly intending to carry out terrorist attacks against "the French Alpine infantry battalion that was deployed in Afghanistan." On September 11, the U.S. Senate Select Committee on Intelligence asserts that individuals from AQIM are among those who planned the attacks against the U.S. Consulate in Benghazi, Libya, that killed U.S. Ambassador Christopher Stevens. On October 15, the Algerian military announces that it killed AQIM's head of external operations, Boualem Bekai, in an ambush near Tizi Ouzou. Sixteen days later, the European Union announces that it is preparing to send military trainers to Mali in an effort to oust Ansar al-Dine, the Movement for Unity and Jihad in West Africa (MUJAO), and AQIM. In December, General Carter F. Ham, commander of U.S. Africa Command, says that AQIM is operating training camps in northern Mali and aiding Nigerian terrorist group Boko Haram by equipping it with weapons, explosives, and money. On December 20, the U.N. Security Council unanimously votes to send 3,300 African Union soldiers into Mali to drive out militant jihadist groups. - April 15, 2011 - January 24, 2012: AQIM renews its violent activities in Algeria and continues kidnapping foreigners and high-profile targets.
On April 15, 2011, militants kill 17 Algerian soldiers when they attack a checkpoint in Tizi Ouzou Province. On August 26, AQIM launches two suicide attacks against the Academie Militaire Interarmes military academy in Cherchell, killing 18. Three months later, AQIM kidnaps four French nationals from a uranium compound in Niger, as well as three foreign nationals from the Netherlands, Sweden, and South Africa. The seven hostages are released in September 2013. AQIM also captures French national Serge Lazarevic and Dutch national Sjaak Rijke, who are freed in 2014 and 2015 respectively. On January 16, 2012, AQIM briefly kidnaps the governor of the Illizi region in Algeria before Libyan forces rescue him the following day. On January 24, 2012, militants from AQIM and the National Movement for the Liberation of Azawad

Violent history:

AQIM has been the most successful al-Qaeda affiliate when it comes to kidnapping and ransoming foreigners, collecting more than $90 million by the end of 2012.⁴⁵ AQIM also launches hundreds of small-scale attacks each year against United Nations, French, and local security forces, killing hundreds. However, AQIM is most notable for its large-scale terror attacks on a beach resort in March 2016 and a popular restaurant in August 2017, which combined killed 37 civilians.⁴⁶

- September 26, 2022: JNIM militants ambush a military convoy taking supplies to a town in Gaskinde, northern Burkina Faso. The militants kill 11 soldiers and injure 28 others, including 20 soldiers. The military reports 50 other soldiers are missing.⁴⁷
- August 13, 2022: JNIM militants ambush Russian mercenaries in Bandiagra central Mali. The attack kills four soldiers. The Russian private military firm Wagner Group does not comment on the attack.⁴⁸
- July 23, 2022: JNIM militants raid Kati base, Mali's main military base right outside of Bamako. The ambush kills one soldier and wounds six others. JNIM releases a statement claiming the attack was a response to governmental collaboration with Russian mercenaries.⁴⁹
- July 2, 2022: JNIM militants attack Benin's national park in the northern part of the country. The attack kills two Beninese soldiers.⁵⁰
- July 1, 2022: JNIM militants ambush Beninese troops near Alfa Kawoura, northern Benin. The attack kills four.⁵¹
- June 17, 2022: Suspected Katiba Macina militants launch a series of attacks across central Mali in the village of Diallassagou and two surrounding towns in the Bankass circle. The attacks kill more than 130 civilians.⁵²
- May 11, 2022: JNIM militants ambush security forces in Kpekankandi, Togo, near the border of Burkina Faso. The militants kills eight Togolese soldiers and injure 13 others. The attack demonstrates JNIM's expanding geographical operations as they have threatened not only Mali, but northern parts of coastal Benin, Ivory Coast, Ghana, and Togo.⁵³
- April 24, 2022: Militants launch three attacks on army bases in Sevaré, Niono, and Bapho, central Mali. The attacks kill six soldiers and injure 20 others. Katiba Macina, a JNIM-affiliate, claims responsibility for the attacks.⁵⁴
- March 29, 2021: Unidentified assailants attack an army post near Kafolo, Ivory Coast. The attack kills two people. Later that day, a police post is attacked in Tehini, killing a gendarme. Although no group claims responsibility, it is suspected that the assailants belonged to Katibat Macina, a JNIM-affiliate.⁵⁵
- December 28, 2020: An armed vehicle carrying French soldiers strikes an explosive device in Mali. The blast kills three French soldiers. JNIM claims responsibility for the attack.⁵⁶
- September 6, 2019: JNIM rebels ambush an army patrol in Soum province, Burkina Faso. One soldier and five assailants are killed.⁵⁷
- August 30, 2019: AQIM affiliate, the Group to Support Islam and Muslims (JNIM), attacks soldiers in Tongomayel, Burkina Faso. One soldier is injured in the attack. The militants claim to capture vehicles, weapons and ammunition as well as blow up the barracks.⁵⁸
- August 19, 2019: Suspected AQIM militants on motorbikes and pickup trucks ambush soldiers in northern Burkina Faso. More than a dozen soldiers are killed.⁵⁹

Al-Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM)

Associations:

Ties to Extremist Entities:

AQIM has either verbally or materially supported a plethora of Salafi terrorist and extremist groups across the region. AQIM officials have issued clear statements on their attempts to strengthen ties with al-Qaeda subgroups in Yemen, Syria, and East Africa.¹⁶² They have also cooperated with, trained, or equipped other extremist groups in North Africa, including al-Mourabitoun and Boko Haram.¹⁶³

- Ahrar al-Sham

AQIM has posted on Twitter in solidarity with Ahrar al-Sham and other Syrian-based jihadist groups: “The stance of AQIM from the Jihadi groups like... Ahrar Al-Sham Brigades and the other Jihad groups is alliance and support and searching for the ways of cooperation in goodness and piety to bring our Muslim Ummah out from the state of backwardness and humiliation which it fell in to after the fall of the Khilafah.”¹⁶⁴

- Al-Mourabitoun

Al-Mourabitoun (“The Sentinels”) formed after the 2013 merger of AQIM offshoots al-Mulathamun (“The Masked Men”) Battalion (AMB) and the Movement for Unity and Jihad in West Africa (MUJAO). Al-Mourabitoun reaffirmed its allegiance to al-Qaeda in 2015 and formally rejoined the group that December after a joint attack in Bamako, Mali. Led by notorious Algerian terrorist Mokhtar Belmokhtar, al-Mourabitoun seeks to establish an Islamic state in West Africa.¹⁶⁵ Since rejoining the AQIM banner, al-Mourabitoun is still believed to retain some autonomy. For instance, of the three gunmen named in the attacks at Grand-Bassam, two—Hamza al-Fulani and Abu Adam al-Ansari—were reportedly associated with al-Mourabitoun whereas the third—Abdul Rahman al-Fulani—was reportedly a member of AQIM proper.¹⁶⁶

- Al-Qaeda

AQIM clarified its ties to al-Qaeda when AQIM leader Abdelmalek Droukdel said in 2008, “We [AQIM] and Al Qaeda are one body. It’s normal that they get stronger by us and we get stronger by them. They back us up and we back them up. They supply us and we supply them with any kind of support, loyalty, advice and available support.”¹⁶⁷

- Al-Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula \(AQAP\)

According to AQIM, the group’s relationship with AQAP is “a relation of love, brotherhood, alliance, support and cooperation to retrieve the lost glory of this Ummah....”¹⁶⁸

- ISIS

AQIM has a controversial relationship with ISIS in light of the strain and ultimate rift between ISIS and al-Qaeda in February 2014. AQIM leaders have expressed support for the group despite the break and AQIM’s official allegiance to al-Qaeda leader Ayman al-Zawahri. On July 1, 2014, for example, AQIM posted an official message of congratulations to ISIS in light of the group’s military gains.¹⁶⁹ In the statement, however, AQIM tempers its congratulations with calls for reconciliation between ISIS and al-Qaeda as well as its affiliate in Syria, Jabhat al-Nusra. The statement also explicitly defers to al-Zawahri, calling him as “Our Sheikh and Emir.”¹⁷⁰ Two weeks later, AQIM posted a statement officially rejecting ISIS’s declaration of a caliphate. In the statement, AQIM refused to swear allegiance to ISIS leader and self-proclaimed caliph, Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi.¹⁷¹ Some analysts have pointed to these two contradictory statements as evidence of internal rifts emerging within AQIM’s leadership over ISIS’s controversial declaration of caliphate.¹⁷² In September 2014, AQIM and al-Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula released a joint statement calling on ISIS to reconcile with al-Qaeda.¹⁷³ Also in September, some AQIM members are reported to have splintered from the group to pledge allegiance to ISIS under a new name, “the Caliphate Soldiers in Algeria.”¹⁷⁴

- Boko Haram

Although AQIM does not have a public relationship with Boko Haram, there are numerous reports of support between the two groups. In January 2010, AQIM leader Abdelmalek Droukdel declared unconditional support for Boko Haram, pledging support in the form of training, weapons, equipment, and personnel.¹⁷⁵ In 2012, AQIM is reported to have given Boko Haram $250,000, and trained its members in kidnapping as a way to raise further money.¹⁷⁶ According to intelligence officials, members of Boko Haram have met Algerian brigades of AQIM fighters for training and weapons. The alleged mastermind of the August 2011 UN bombing is reported to have trained with AQIM and a number of operatives in the region have reported ties to both Boko Haram and AQIM.¹⁷⁷ Al-Qaeda has not made formal links with Boko Haram, and Ayman al-Zawahiri has made no explicit mention of the group.¹⁷⁸ Nonetheless, Nigerian President Goodluck Jonathan has claimed that Boko Haram is an “al-Qaeda operation,” and one reporter for news outlet Al Jazeera says that the group’s ties to al-Qaeda and its affiliates are “now so numerous that they are impossible to ignore.”¹⁷⁹

Iran

AQIM has not made a statement on the group’s relationship with the Iranian government or al-Qaeda’s overarching relationship with Iran. When asked to clarify the relationship between al-Qaeda and Iran, AQIM’s representative responded, “We are authorized to speak on behalf of AQIM only, and the answer of that question exceeds our authority, so excuse us.”¹⁸⁰

Al-Shabab

As of April 2013, AQIM pursued a relationship with Somalian group al-Shabab. AQIM has described its relationship with al-Shabab as “what we aspire to achieve not only with al-Qaeda in the East Africa but also with all the branches of al-Qaeda Al-Jihad in the world and that is a normal matter for each organization.”¹⁸¹

Nusra Front

AQIM has declared its support for the al-Qaeda affiliate in Syria. As AQIM’s head of media stated in 2013, “The stance of AQIM from the Jihadi groups like Jabhat Al-Nusra and Ahrar Al-Sham Brigades and the other Jihad groups is alliance and support.”¹⁸²

Al-Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM)

Media Coverage:

AQIM Defeated or Resurgent

Like its parent organization and other affiliates, AQIM is not immune from the media debate over whether it has been defeated or is resurgent. In February 2014, McClatchy asked, “Is the U.S. Powerless to Stop the Spread of Al Qaeda?”¹⁸³ The article ominously noted that the “black flag of al Qaeda flies in Fallujah, the group and its offshoots are spreading across the Middle East and Africa, and their fighters are battling for control of cities not only in Iraq but also in Syria, Lebanon and beyond.”¹⁸⁴ The outlet quoted U.S. Representative Mike Rogers (R-MI), chairman of the U.S. House of Representatives Intelligence Committee, who bluntly stated, “Harbor no illusions: Al Qaeda is not on its heels or even on the run... Their operations in Iraq, Syria, Pakistan and large portions of Africa indicate that al Qaeda is alive and well...”¹⁸⁵

Yet by late April 2014, the New York Times’ Adam Nossiter asked, “Is Al Qaeda’s regional affiliate in West Africa dead, at least for now?” Nossiter pointed to the deaths of “more than 40[AQIM] jihadists in Mali” since March 2014, including Mokhtar Belmokhtar’s father-in-law, as well as the fact that “jihadists have not pulled off any significant attacks in nearly a year... Many of their arms caches have been destroyed.”¹⁸⁶ Nossiter quoted a Western defense official who said, “Their offensive capabilities have been seriously harmed. Their leaders have been neutralized, their logistics have been damaged... this is not the AQIM of one year ago.” That analysis led Nossiter to conclude, “So the group that terrorized half a country, northern Mali... has been reduced to a pale remnant of its former self. It is no longer the pre-eminent threat to fragile states in West Africa’s Sahel region...”¹⁸⁷

Similarly reporting AQIM’s death-knell militarily in late April, the Associated Press pointed out that AQIM had been so devastated by France’s air strikes that it was “trying something new to stay relevant: Twitter.” According to the network, the group’s PR campaign “aims to allow [AQIM] to move the fight at least partly off the battlefield by appealing to widespread concerns, such as the repression and a sense of injustice that galvanized the Arab Spring revolts.”¹⁸⁸

A CNN article similarly downplays the threat played by AQIM, referring to them as a “a small splinter group of al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM), an al-Qaeda affiliate prone to disunity.” CNN also alluded to al-Qaeda’s message and draw being seemingly outdated in the rise of ISIS, “It is not the first—and likely will not be the last—jihadist outfit to quit al-Qaeda for the millenarian message of al-Baghdadi.”

Islamist Takeover in Mali

While many news sources, such as the New York Times, resorted to labeling the diverse mix of jihadist groups operating in Mali as simply “al-Qaeda linked,” Al Jazeera reported that AQIM was operating under the umbrella of Ansar al-Dine. Specifically, Al Jazeera noted that they were “a group of local Ifoghas Tuaregs, Berabiche Arabs and other local ethnic groups” who shared AQIM’s desire for implementing Sharia. According to the report, AQIM’s relationship with Ansar al-Dine was “analogous to the associate between the Taliban and al-Qaeda in Afghanistan, with Ansar al-Dine playing host,” while another group, the Movement for Unity and Jihad in West Africa (MUJWA), was “split off from AQIM” but was happy to work together with it for common purposes.¹⁸⁹

The New York Times further clarified AQIM’s larger role in Mali in December 2012, when it reported top U.S. military commander in Africa General Carter F. Ham, saying that AQIM was running training camps in northern Mali and providing weapons and funding to Boko Haram in Nigeria. The article noted that Boko Haram members “had traveled to [AQIM] training camps in northern Mali,” and described General Ham’s comments as “the most detailed and sobering American military analysis so far of the consequences of” AQIM gaining control of a safe haven in northern Mali.¹⁹⁰ In the Guardian, Jason Burke wrote that the violence in Mali was partly due to the fact that AQIM had taken advantage of “arms, anarchy and auxiliaries” to become a force capable of battling the French army.

However, the rule that AQIM, Ansar al-Dine, and MUJAO enjoyed in the north did not last long. This is because, as Burke also notes, the feud between Mokhtar Belmokhtar and Abdelmalek Droukdel created problems within AQIM. Belmokhtar was so upset about not being promoted to lead a faction of AQIM that he “set about planning operations that would upstage those of AQIM itself.”¹⁹¹

After France intervened and put the jihadist groups “on the run” in the northern desert and mountainous regions of the country, Time wrote in early February 2013 that France’s military campaign had been “so successful” that the French President planned to visit “scarcely three weeks after the anti-Islamist operation began January 11.”¹⁹²

Benghazi

The initial coverage of the U.S. Consulate attack in Benghazi, Libya, that killed Ambassador J. Christopher Stevens blamed Ansar al-Sharia (AAS), with few reports linking AQIM to the operation.

The New York Times reported that the attack “was led by a brigade of Islamist fighters known as Ansar al-Sharia,” noting that the group claimed it had not acted alone. The article made only one reference to al-Qaeda, indicating that “reports from some terrorism experts” linking the “recent death in drone strikes of senior Qaeda leaders, including Abu Yahya al-Libi, were unsupported.”¹⁹³

For its part, CNN reported that a “pro-al Qaeda” group called the Imprisoned Omar Abdul Raham Brigades was the “chief suspect” in the attack, pointing out its involvement in previous attacks against the International Red Cross and the British ambassador’s convoy in Benghazi. The article claimed that AAS “was responsible for organizing the demonstration outside the U.S. Consulate,” but it did not clearly tie the Imprisoned Omar Abdul Raham Brigades to Ansar al-Sharia. Furthermore, the authors only brought AQIM into the story offhandedly, mentioning that a number of fighters from the group were operating in the town of Derna, Libya.¹⁹⁴

But outlets were soon questioning whether AQIM played a larger role in the attacks. On September 28, Eli Lake wrote in the Daily Beast that Ansar al-Sharia’s militants had “boasted to Al-Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb about the attack,” while also citing one U.S. intelligence official who claimed that “AAS operative[s] were subordinate to the mid-level AQIM members.”¹⁹⁵ In November 2012, Reuters reported comments from General Carter Ham, the head of the U.S. military’s Africa Command, that “very likely that some of the terrorists who participated in the attack in Benghazi have at least some linkages to AQIM... That is not to say that it was AQIM which planned, or organized or led the activity, but clearly some of the individuals had some linkages.”¹⁹⁶

In addition to Ham’s claims linking AQIM to the attack, CNN reported in March 2013 that a call “was made specifically to [Mokhtar Belmokhtar]” after the attack in which the caller excitedly told the then-AQIM senior leader, “Congratulations!” The network noted, however, that there was “no proof that the call was specifically about the attack,” and likewise said that there was no proof that “[Belmokhtar] directed or was involved in the Benghazi attack.”¹⁹⁷

Kidnappings

From 2009 through 2011, AQIM gained further notoriety by kidnapping more than a dozen predominantly European nationals.

After the June 2009 beheading of Briton Edwin Dyer in Niger, the Daily Mail guessed that his slaying could have been “part of a double message of defiance by al-Qaeda ahead of Mr. Obama’s speech in Cairo today.” According to security expert Hamid Ghomrassa, the first message was that “Al-Qaeda is a force in the region that cannot be ignored,” while the second message was that “from now on the West should understand that paying ransoms to get back hostages is the only way to deal.” The paper noted that Europeans and Canadians who were “kidnapped in similar circumstances” were let go in exchange for ransom payments despite the British government’s “blanket policy against” paying ransoms to terrorist groups.¹⁹⁸

When three Spanish aid workers kidnapped in November 2009 were freed by AQIM in late 2010, Reuters speculated that they might have been freed in exchange for prisoners being held in Mauritania. Though officials in Mauritania remained silent regarding the alleged prisoner swap, Reuters cited security analysts labeling of AQIM as opportunistic, making such exchanges likely for the return of their own or to fundraise.¹⁹⁹

By the end of 2012, the New York Times reported that AQIM had earned “as much as $90 million or more in ransoms over the past decade, turning it into one of the region’s wealthiest, best-armed militant groups.” One of the militants interviewed by the paper bragged openly that, “The source of our financing is the Western countries. They are paying for jihad.” The paper also quoted the Treasury Department’s undersecretary for terrorism and financial intelligence, David Cohen, who said that the average ransom payment to AQIM had increased from $4.5 million per hostage in 2010 to $5.4 million per hostage in 2011.²⁰⁰

Violence in Algeria

Al-Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM)

When the newly minted AQIM unleashed multiple bombings in Algeria on April 11, 2007, including one that targeted the prime minister's office, the New York Times described AQIM as "North Africa's most active terrorist group" and noted that the violence was "the deadliest attack in the capital" since the late 1990s.²⁰¹ According to the Times, the GSPC—AQIM's predecessor—"had been badly eroded in recent years... [but] has apparently undergone a revival... [since it] aligned itself with al-Qaeda. Its aim is to overthrow the government and install an Islamic theocracy there and throughout North Africa."²⁰²

Reuters also compared the scale of violence by AQIM to that of Algeria's civil war, reporting that the April 11 attack "raised fears the [North] African oil exporter was slipping back into the intense political violence of the 1990s." One analyst quoted by the outlet likened the attack on the prime minister's office to the 9/11 attacks in 2001. Mounir Boudjema, the editor of Algeria's Liberte, said, "Since they joined al-Qaeda the rebels are clearly opting for symbolic and noisy targets such as the government palace, which is in a way our World Trade Center."²⁰³

After AQIM bombed the U.N. headquarters in Algiers in December 2007, Time warned that the attack "increases the risk that AQIM is ramping up its violent struggle to bring down the Algerian government," noting that it was the "fourth big hit" by the group since January. As with similar reports about al-Qaeda's ability to regenerate, the magazine pointed out that despite the Algerian authorities having allegedly "decimated AQIM ranks" since April, the group continued to recruit effectively, remaining "the largest risk of non-homegrown terror to continental Europe."²⁰⁴

Rhetoric:

Joint AQIM-JNIM Statement, October 13, 2023

Joint AQIM-JNIM statement praising Hamas and encouraging violence on Israel:

"We congratulate your actions and urge you to continue, biting your teeth with patience on the path of jihad...complete what you began and seek help from God alone for it is He who guarantees victory...we in al-Qaeda are racing against time to obtain the ability to reach you to liberate Jerusalem. Our ranks are stacked together, loud and boastful...Hasten and seek forgiveness from your Lord...and light a fire in the West Bank under the feet of the Jews...so rise up and fight the Jews and those who protect the Jews."²⁰⁵

AQIM Statement, May 2018

"This statement calls to boycott all Western companies and foundations ... that operate in the Islamic Maghreb ... and the countries of the Sahel, and gives a warning to them that they are legitimate target for the mujahideen."²⁰⁶

AQIM Statement, June 2013

"A group of lions... went to cut off the head of the criminal Lotfi Ben Jeddou at his home... and God allowed them to kill a number of his personal guards..."²⁰⁷

Abu Ubayda Yousif al-Annabi, May 2013

"[Polytheists] are working continuously and cunning at day and night against the Muslims and to corrupt their religion and limiting their freedom in practicing its rituals, all that for oppression and enmity and out of envy from themselves."²⁰⁸

Abu Ubayda Yousif al-Annabi, May 2013

"The enmity of France towards the religion of Islam is old, since this state appeared as a global power, and it set out crusader colonial campaigns it didn't stop its aggression against the Muslims rather it continued to this day, although in recent times it began to take the forms dominated by the character of malice and guile and cunning, and exhuming the infrastructure of the Islamic civilization and identity intending to ruining and blur its features, without rushing to the use of military force, and this crusade is only another proof for the deep-rootedness of this enmity in the hearts of the French politicians, the old and current, liberals and socialists, moderates and extremists, they are all alike."²⁰⁹
