Overview

Executive Summary:

Forza Nuova (New Force) is an Italian far-right political party. The party's ideology is ultra-nationalist,¹ conservative,² and neofascist.³ Forza Nuova members have committed high-profile acts of violence, though Forza Nuova itself purports to be non-violent. The party has offices and followers in every region of Italy.⁴

Forza Nuova was first formed as a grassroots branch of the neofascist Italian political party Fiamma Tricolore (Tricolor Flame). The group later broke off and became its own party,⁵ under the leadership of well-known radical-right politicians Roberto Fiore and Massimo Morsello.⁶

Forza Nuova has gained notoriety for its inflammatory advertisements and slogans. Recent slogans displayed on Forza Nuova billboards include anti-gay sentiments, such as "Italy needs children, not gays" and "No more f[-]gs!"⁷ Forza Nuova has posted many anti-immigration signs and posters around Italy, some of which are highly inflammatory, including one in which a woman is bleeding on the ground after having been sexually assaulted. The sign reads, "Rape and violence against women and the elderly—the government fails at immigration."⁸

Forza Nuova has never won a seat in the Italian or European parliaments. Between 2003 and 2006, Forza Nuova ran in elections as part of the now-extinct extreme-right Italian political coalition "Social Alternative," which was led by Alessandra Mussolini, granddaughter of the late Italian fascist dictator Benito Mussolini. In the 2008 and 2013 elections, Forza Nuova ran independently. In the 2018 race, the group partnered with other far-right parties to found and compete as part of the "Italy for the Italians" coalition.⁹ Both while running on its own and in a coalition, Forza Nuova best showing came in the 2004 European Parliament elections, when the Social Alternative coalition received 1.2 percent of the vote.

Forza Nuova is a member of the Alliance for Peace and Freedom, an extreme-right European political coalition.¹⁰ Forza Nuova leader Roberto Fiore also heads the Alliance.¹¹

Forza Nuova

Doctrine:

Forza Nuova's ideology is ultranationalist,¹² conservative,¹³ and neofascist.¹⁴ The party's key political positions, as articulated in its "Eight Points" manifesto, include prohibiting abortion; encouraging family and demographic growth among ethnic Italians; banning immigration and repatriating immigrants; banning Freemasonry and combating secret societies like the mafia; eliminating usury and writing off public debt; restoring the 1929 Lateran Treaty and thereby reestablishing Roman Catholicism as Italy's state religion; repealing the Scelba and Mancino Laws, which proscribe defending fascism or reestablishing the Fascist Party, and criminalize incitement to violence, hate crimes, and certain hate speech;¹⁵ and forming labor guilds.¹⁶

Forza Nuova's ultranationalist ideology is illustrated by the group's popular mantra, "Italians First!"¹⁷ Anti-American sentiments, xenophobia, and anti-Semitism are deeply rooted in the group's ideology and differentiate the party from other Italian right-wing groups.

In speeches and billboard campaigns, Forza Nuova warns Italians of the alleged dangers of immigration, claiming that immigrants will bring "scabies, meningitis, tuberculosis and Ebola" into the country.¹⁸ After Mada Kabobo, a 21-year-old Ghanaian immigrant to Italy, killed an Italian citizen with an ax,¹⁹ Forza Nuova launched its new campaign, "Immigration Kills."²⁰ Billboards for the campaign show images of immigrants convicted of violent crimes, their photos splattered in blood. "Who will be next?" the posters read.²¹

In January 2016, following the organized attack of over 300 women by men who appeared to be of north African descent in Germany on New Year's Eve,²² Forza Nuova created posters highlighting their stance on immigration. The posters, made up of two photos, show one photo of German women smiling and holding up signs that read "Welcome immigrants," alongside a photo of a woman holding her nose and appearing frightened as a black man comes up from behind her and touches her neck and shoulders.²³

Forza Nuova has also expressed anti-American sentiments. In a November 2014 Facebook post, Forza Nuova President Roberto Fiore wrote that "American tyranny is the primary cause of the ethical-moral disaster, as well as economic, and the immigration invasion that threatens every day the very survival of our common identity."²⁴

Anti-Semitism is also a key component of Forza Nuova's ideology. In June 2008, Fiore spoke of his support for Iran's then-president, Mahmoud Ahmadinejad. When asked about his brief conversation with Ahmadinejad, Fiore said, "We at Forza Nuova are against any event of war wished for by the Jewish-American lobby against the Iranian population."²⁵ Hours before his arrival in Rome, Ahmadinejad stated that Israel will "disappear off the geographical scene."²⁶ Forza Nuova leader Roberto Fiore has also publicly denounced U.S. wars that, he claims, were started by "the people who put Christ on the cross."²⁷

On January 24, 2014, Ernesto Moroni, a 29-year-old Italian with ties to Forza Nuova, sent packages with severed pig heads to Rome's main synagogue, to the city's Israeli consulate, and to a Holocaust refugee museum in Italy.²⁸ Moroni sent them under the name Giovanni Preziosi, an anti-Semitic and fascist politician. When questioned, Moroni admitted that he was the perpetrator, saying, "It was an extreme gesture to make my message arrive to the Jewish community."²⁹

The party also opposes gay marriage and adoption by homosexual couples. One of Forza Nuova's most notorious campaigns denounced homosexuals in Italy, including on billboards, with slogans like "No more f[-]gs!"³⁰

Forza Nuova also opposes both capitalism and communism, viewing both as adversarial to nationalism and reducing individuals to mere cogs in an economic system, rather than individuals with distinct cultures, races, religions, and desires. The party instead calls for "an economic system that provides a generous welfare system for the people, but at the same time allows innovative people to reap the rewards of their ingenuity."³¹

Organizational Structure:

Forza Nuova is led by Roberto Fiore at the national level and by directors at the regional, city, and town levels. Local chapters of Forza Nuova are scattered throughout Italy, and many of them have their own websites and/or social-media accounts.³² The chief of the group's Rome chapter is Giuliano Castellino.³³

Financing:

Forza Nuova

Forza Nuova receives funding from private donors. Joining the group requires a donation of 20 or 50 euros.³⁴

Even though Forza Nuova professes to oppose capitalism, it reportedly owns British businesses and trusts, the latter of which receive anonymous donations and transfer the money to Italian companies owned by relatives or business partners of party leaders.³⁵ Party leader Roberto Fiore also owns a company in Cyprus.³⁶

Reporters and others have also claimed that the Russian government may fund Forza Nuova, given that Fiore has organized business trips to Crimea to encourage Italian investment in that Russian-occupied territory.³⁷

Recruitment:

Forza Nuova relies heavily on the Internet and public appearances for recruitment. The group has an official website³⁸ as well as satellite websites and Facebook pages for its local branches.³⁹ The party is also active on Twitter.⁴⁰

To recruit in person, Forza Nuova sets up booths in the various squares around Italy.⁴¹ In some cities, such as Milan, Forza Nuova owns coffee bars, where it is possible for Forza Nuova members to congregate.⁴²

History:

- January 15, 2022: Following the funeral of Alessia Augello—in which photographs showed her coffin donned in a Nazi flag—police launch a search for eight Forza Nuova militants in Rome.
 According to media sources, the eight are under investigation for the crimes of “reorganization of the dissolved fascist party,” and for “organization having, among other purposes, the incitement to discrimination against hatred or violence for racial, ethnic, national or religious reasons.” Source: “Rome, funeral with Nazi flag on the coffin: eight Forza Nuova militants investigated and searched,” Italy 24 News, January 15, 2022, <https://www.italy24news.com/News/340320.html>.
- January 11, 2022: At the funeral of Alessia Augello, a former member of Forza Nuova, funeral goers are seen giving Nazi salutes and later draping a swastika on the coffin of the deceased.
 The activities of the funeral, which takes place in Rome, are condemned by Italian Catholic and Jewish leaders. - January 2, 2022: A judge in Rome announces that the start of the trial for crimes committed at the anti-COVID-19 vaccine protests on October 9, 2021, will take place on March 2, 2022.
 Among those on trial are Forza Nuova founder Roberto Fiore and Giuliano Castellino, head of the group’s chapter in Rome. The charges range from instigation to commit crime to devastation and resisting public officials. - October 11, 2021: Following the anti-COVID-19 vaccine protests in Rome on October 9, 2021, Italian parliamentarians from center-left and democratic parties push for a motion to dismantle Forza Nuova under the Scelba Law.
 According to Euractiv, the Scelba law—which prohibits the rebuilding of a fascist party—is difficult to enforce unless certain cases present “concrete danger to the democratic order.” According to media sources, the protests against the Green Pass—which is a digital or paper document confirming a worker is vaccinated—were backed by far-right neo-fascist groups, including Forza Nuova, which has been known to espouse anti-vaccine and anti-lockdown rhetoric since the start of the COVID-19 pandemic. - September 9, 2019: Facebook and Instagram block social media accounts of Forza Nuova and Casapound for violating the platform’s policies against hate speech.
 In response to the ban, Fiore says his group will engage in more street protests and recruitment. Members of both far-right groups move to sue Facebook over the ban, claiming the suspension of accounts is illegal and violates their right to freedom of expression. However, on February 23, 2020, a Court of First Instance in Italy issues a decision that upholds the removals, claiming that hate speech is not protected by the right to freedom of expression and Facebook is entitled to take action based on its Terms of Service. - July 15, 2019: Police raid the homes of several neofascists, including customs agent and former Forza Nuova candidate Fabio Del Bergoglio, and find a significant arsenal of arms, including an air-to-air missile used in Qatar’s military.
 The police issue a statement saying that Italian far-rightists fighting in the war in Ukraine brought the missile back with them. The police do not explain how the missile got from Qatar to Ukraine, but state that in intercepted WhatsApp conversations, Del Bergoglio sought to sell the weapons to a third party—possibly “a foreign government official.” Other captured weapons include pistols, bayonets, hunting rifles, gun parts, ammunition, knives, and brass knuckles. Nazi and fascist paraphernalia were also discovered. Forza Nuova denied any current connections to the accused extremists, saying, “‘If one of the arrested was a candidate on the lists of Forza Nuova back in 2001 (18 years ago!). - June 20, 2019: Police raid the homes of several far-right activists, including Luigi Cortese, Forza Nuova’s regional coordinator for Piemonte and Valle d’Aosta.
 They find pro-fascist banners and other paraphernalia, as well as busts of the late Italian fascist dictator Benito Mussolini. Police issue Cortese a citation for apologetics for fascism. - Forza Nuova Leader Roberto Fiore leads a delegation of the Alliance for Peace and Freedom, a far-right European political coalition that he chairs, to meet with Hezbollah foreign-affairs official Ammar al-Moussawi in Beirut.
 “It has been an honor to meet today the representative of Hezbollah, Mr. Ammar Al-Moussawi,” Fiore said. “We expressed the European support for Hezbollah and the Lebanese government in their efforts towards peace and in the conflict with Israel. Everyone must know that there are millions of Europeans who completely share your aspirations for peace and are your partners in your struggle with the Zionist trends.” Source: “Hezbollah Official in Beirut Receives Visiting Far-Right ‘Alliance for Freedom and Peace’ Party Members from UK, Italy, Belgium, Germany, and Croatia – Who Express Support for Hezbollah’s Fight against Israel,” Middle East Media Research Institute, March 19, 2019, <https://www.memri.org/reports/hezbollah-official-beirut-receives-visiting-far-right-alliance-freedom-and-peace-party>.
- October 28, 2018: Extreme-rightists, including members of Forza Nuova, hold a march commemorating the late Italian fascist dictator Benito Mussolini’s “March on Rome” in 1922.
 The march proceeded notwithstanding Italian Interior Minister Marco Minniti’s warning that it would violate Italy’s anti-fascism laws. One of the marchers, a Forza Nuova member, wore a T-shirt saying “Auschwitzland” with a depiction of the camp, a take-off on Disneyland shirts. Violent history:

- October 13, 2021: A Molotov cocktail is discovered outside the local office of Italy's main trade union, Italian General Confederation of Labour (CGIL), in the Marche region town of Jesi. The incendiary device causes a small fire next to the office's gate but does not explode. The incident comes days after rioters—including a group reportedly led by Forza Nuova—storm the CGIL headquarters in Rome amid protests against Italy's COVID-19 "green pass" requirement.⁴³
- October 9-11, 2021: On October 9, protests in Rome against Italy's COVID-19 "green pass" requirement—which requires all workers to show proof of vaccinations—turn violent. According to media sources, approximately 10,000 people take to the streets with groups attempting to break barricades and cross police lines as well as violently storm several buildings. The riots leave at least two health workers and 38 police officers wounded. Police arrest 12 people in connection with the violent protests, including two leaders of far-right group Forza Nuova, Roberto Fiore and Giuliano Castellino. On October 11, members of Italy's ruling coalition in parliament put forth a motion calling on Prime Minister Mario Draghi's administration to dissolve Forza Nuova and all neo-fascist political movements. Forza Nuova's website is also forced offline by a court order following claims that the group used the site to encourage criminal activity and incite violence.⁴⁴
- July 15, 2019: Police raid the homes of several neofascists, including customs agent and former Forza Nuova candidate Fabio Del Bergiolo, and find a significant arsenal of arms, including an air-to-air missile used in Qatar's military. The police issue a statement saying that Italian far-rightists fighting in the war in Ukraine brought the missile back with them. The police do not explain how the missile got from Qatar to Ukraine, but state that in intercepted WhatsApp conversations, Del Bergoglio sought to sell the weapons to a third party—possibly "a foreign government official." Other captured weapons include pistols, bayonets, hunting rifles, gun parts, ammunition, knives, and brass knuckles. Nazi and fascist paraphernalia were also discovered. Forza Nuova denied any current connections to the accused extremists, saying, "If one of the arrested was a candidate on the lists of Forza Nuova back in 2001 (18 years ago!). We affirm that on the contrary none of the people involved has been a militant of Forza Nuova for years."⁴⁵
- April 3, 2019: Far-right activists, allegedly including members of Forza Nuova, violently protest the move-in of Roma families to a housing project in Rome. The protesters yell insults and sling objects vans of Roma, who flee the area.⁴⁶
- January 7, 2019: Forza Nova's Rome chief, Giuliano Castellino, and other far-right extremists assault two journalists who are covering a commemoration of the 1978 murders of neofascists.⁴⁷
- 2003: 20 Forza Nuova militants interrupted a local TV station broadcast in Verona featuring radical Muslim activist Adel Smith. The militants broke into the studio, waving flags featuring the Celtic cross, and attacked Smith and his colleague. They punched and kicked both victims and threw eggs at them.⁴⁸ Smith was well known in Italy for rallying for legislation that would remove crucifixes from Italian public places.⁴⁹

Forza Nuova

Media Coverage:

Social Media

On September 9, 2019, Facebook and Instagram suspended the social media accounts of Forza Nuova and another neo-fascist group, Casapound. Facebook claimed that the groups and some of their members had violated the platform's policies against hate speech. Following the ban, Fiore said his group would respond with more street protests and recruitment. Individual members of Forza Nuova and Casapound brought a lawsuit against Facebook in the Court of First Instance in Rome, claiming the removal of the users' pages was illegal and a violation of their right to freedom of expression. On February 23, 2020, the court issued a decision that upheld the removals, claiming that hate speech was not protected by the right to freedom of expression and Facebook was entitled to take action based on its Terms of Service.⁶⁰

Media

Forza Nuova's inflammatory rhetoric and advertising campaigns have attracted media attention, particularly in the group's native Italy.

Forza Nuova's provocative billboards and posters, which are plastered all around Italian cities, receive overwhelming negative media attention from local, national, and international sources. Forza Nuova's anti-gay campaign, one of its largest, received overwhelmingly negative attention from Italian media sources. Corriere della Sera, the Milan-based newspaper, uses words like "gay hatred" to describe Forza Nuova's actions, billboards, and marches.⁶¹ Il Fatto Quotidiano, another Italian paper, describes Forza Nuova as "homophobic."⁶²

North American coverage of Forza Nuova has been scarce. The New York Times did, however, mention Forza Nuova when discussing the racist backlash against Cécile Kyenge, a black Italian who became minister of integration under Prime Minister Enrico Letta. In the article, the New York Times described Forza Nuova as "a xenophobic political movement."⁶³

Rhetoric:

Forza Nuova Statement, October 2021

Following October 9, 2021 violent protests in Rome:

“The popular revolution will not stop its path, with or without us, until the Green Pass [COVID-19 proof of vaccination] is definitively withdrawn. Saturday was a watershed between the old and the new. The people decided to raise the level of the clash.”⁶⁴

Roberto Fiore, Forza Nuova Leader, October 8, 2016

“Forza Nuova defends Assad and the Syrian people against attacks by ISIS and the USA.”⁶⁵

Forza Nuova Poster, October 2017

The poster depicts a black man raping a white woman (referencing a recent rape of a woman on a Polish beach, reportedly by immigrants), and says: “Protect her from the invaders. It could be your mother, wife, sister, daughter.” The poster is adapted from a World War II fascist poster in which the man was a black American soldier.⁶⁶

Roberto Fiore, Forza Nuova Leader, May 13, 2019

“Anti-fascism and arrogance are a thing of the past, Italy has changed and Forza Nuova speaks how, where, and whenever it wants. The only resistance is ethnic.”⁶⁷

National Secretary, Forza Nuova, May 26, 2015

“The lords of war in Washington continue in this way their politics of death. Whoever wants real peace has the responsibility to unmask them and stop them. Whoever wants peace must support the Syria of Assad.”⁶⁸
