Overview

Executive Summary:

Jama'at Nusrat al-Islam wal Muslimeen (JNIM), meaning “The Support Group for Islam and Muslims,” is an al-Qaeda affiliated group based in Mali that has in recent years expanded its operations to neighboring countries such as Burkina Faso, Niger, and Senegal.¹ As a formal al-Qaeda affiliate in Africa, JNIM is dedicated to dismantling regional governments and implementing sharia (Islamic law) in areas where it operates.²

The jihadist group was officially founded on March 2, 2017, when the Sahara branch of al-Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM)—a formal al-Qaeda affiliate that operates primarily in Algeria, Mali, Mauritania, Libya, Tunisia, and Niger—merged with local Salafist groups Ansar al-Dine (AAD), al-Mourabitoun, and Macina Liberation Front (MLF or Katiba Macina). Iyad Ag Ghaly, the former emir of AAD, was announced as the new group's leader.³

Ghaly founded Ansar al-Dine (AAD) in December 2011, after AQIM leader Abdelmalek Droukdel sought to expand AQIM activities into the Sahel, specifically in northern Mali.⁴ AAD—strengthened by AQIM's continued military, financial, and logistical support—quickly proved formidable as it captured a number of towns, including Tessalit and Timbuktu, between January and April 2012.⁵ Another active AQIM splinter group, al-Mourabitoun, carried out the November 2015 lethal attack on the Radisson Blu hotel in Bamako, Mali's capital. Al-Mourabitoun has since taken the lead in AQIM operations, including a high-profile attack on a U.N. base in northern Mali in June 2016.⁶

Jama'at Nusrat al-Islam wal Muslimeen (JNIM)

The formation of JNIM represented al-Qaeda's new emphasis on "unity" in order to expand the operational and geographical capacities of the organization and successfully implement sharia law in the Sahel region.⁸ Strategically speaking, JNIM boasts an expansive operational cache as the component groups have honed various skill sets as well as built geographical and local knowledge. According to the Institute for Security Studies, the merger provided nascent groups, such as the Mali-based Macina Liberation Front led by Amadou Kouffa, the chance to learn from more militarily seasoned groups like al-Mourabitoun.⁹

In the March 2017 announcement of JNIM's founding, Ghaly affirmed his allegiance to Abdelmalek Droukdel, the emir of AQIM; Ayman al-Zawahiri, al-Qaeda's emir; and Haibatullah Akhundzada, the Taliban's overall leader.¹⁰ In his role as JNIM emir, Ghaly stated in an April 3, 2017 interview with al-Qaeda's weekly al-Massar publication that France was his "historic enemy" as it threatened al-Qaeda and its allies as "agents who occupy our lands, attack our religion, and steal our wealth."¹¹ As of 2022, violence in northern and central Mali has increased more than 300 percent since 2017. Accordingly, media sources regularly cite JNIM or an affiliated terrorist group as the culprit for much of the violence in the area.¹²

Furthermore, as JNIM gained increasing influence across the Sahel, the group has found itself in conflict with ISIS. When ISIS lost its territorial caliphate in Iraq and Syria, JNIM took advantage of ISIS's seemingly weakened position among the wider extremist nexus and asserted more dominance throughout the Sahel. Given the power struggle between the two groups, JNIM and ISIS have attempted to position themselves as alternatives to the Malian government, which has been criticized for severely neglecting the needs of the Malian public since 2012, following the Tuareg rebellion.¹³

Since its formation, JNIM has continually clashed with French counterterrorism forces in the Sahel region, deployed under Operation Barkhane—France's anti-terror mission in Burkina Faso, Mali, Chad, Niger, and Mauritania from 2014 until 2022. One of the notable clashes occurred in February 2018 when French forces launched three simultaneous raids on JNIM forces and their affiliates in northern Mali, killing over 20 jihadi fighters and six JNIM leaders.¹⁴ In response, JNIM militants attacked the French embassy and army headquarters in Burkina Faso's capital. JNIM has also targeted the U.N. Multidimensional Stabilization Mission in Mali (MINUSMA) and the G5 Sahel Joint Force, a military counterterrorism partnership between Burkina Faso, Mali, Mauritania, Niger, and Chad. In June 2018, JNIM launched the first attack on the headquarters of the G5 Sahel Joint Forces in Sévaré, Mali.¹⁵

On March 12, 2020, JNIM released a statement claiming the group would be willing to engage in dialogue with the Malian government, on the condition that French troops and the U.N. peacekeeping mission withdraw from the country. The statement came after a February 2020 announcement by former Malian President Ibrahim Boubacar Keïta, who claimed he had sent his high representative, Dioncounda Traoré, to central Mali to initiate communication with jihadist groups, in the hopes of achieving a ceasefire. The militants Traoré spoke to allegedly included Ghaly and Amadou Kouffa.¹⁶ However, authorities from France—which had more than 5,000 troops in the country at the time—advised Bamako against negotiating with the jihadists.¹⁷

As negotiations between the terror group and the central government came to a standstill, Bamako asserted an independent position in its fight against JNIM, withdrawing from the G5 Sahel on May 15, 2022. Bamako claimed the reason it sought to withdraw from the group was the lack of progress in the fight against JNIM militants and other al-Qaeda and ISIS linked groups. The move led to international criticism, with the U.N.'s top political official for Africa, Assistant Secretary-General Martha Pobe, calling the decision "unfortunate and regrettable."¹⁸ Given Mali's decision to leave the G5 Sahel and France's complete military withdrawal from the country in August 2022, Mali is now contending with an intractable conflict as JNIM and competing extremist groups continue to relentlessly launch attacks on Malian security forces and foreign troops stationed in the country.¹⁹

Further providing ammunition to JNIM's ambitions for increased support and legitimacy among the Malian public was Mali's decision to partner with mercenaries from the Russian Wagner Group to combat AQIM and JNIM fighters. Following the deployment of around 1,000 Wagner mercenaries, accusations of indiscriminate killings were alleged by the U.N. and the United States (U.S.) in April 2022. Accordingly, reports circulated that more than 300 civilians were killed following a counterterrorism operation in central Mali's Moura area. According to media sources, "Wagner's operations are mainly located in central Mali and mainly target the Fulani community, of which JNIM presents itself as the protector." JNIM has capitalized on these accusations with their propaganda framing the intentions of Bamako and its Kremlin-affiliated partners as an "ethnic war against Muslims."²⁰

Doctrine:

Jama'at Nusrat al-Islam wal Muslimeen (JNIM)

JNIM adheres to the Salafi strain of Islam followed by the al-Qaeda network. Like AQIM, JNIM perceives all non-Islamist governments as illegitimate and, accordingly, seeks to replace them in the countries in which the group operates.²¹ Given that JNIM is an alliance of four separate jihadist groups, the goals and objectives of the group are regionally specific, with JNIM focusing on its influence across Mali and neighboring countries. The terrorist group reportedly seeks to preserve relations with local communities to expand their operational outreach. The organization also relies heavily on the idea of unity as the four groups that came together to form JNIM were once disjointed but are now serving under one banner.²²

JNIM, as well as its affiliated groups, seeks to impose its ultra-conservative interpretation of Islam on the region. However, there have been instances where the militants have attempted to judiciously approach their goals by adopting a system of shadow governance, allowing for some local autonomy in areas under JNIM's control.²³

Organizational Structure:

Following the announcement of JNIM's formation in 2017, Ghaly claimed that the four AQIM factions had united "into one group" operating under "one emir" after al-Qaeda "sought unification according to Sharia law."²⁴ While operating under a new name and new emir, JNIM appears to remain under the aegis of al-Qaeda. Ghaly also stated that he renewed bayat (allegiance) to al-Qaeda founder Ayman al-Zawahiri, AQIM emir Abdelmalek Droukdel, and Taliban emir Mawlawi Haibatullah Akhundzada.²⁵ Thus, the relationship between JNIM, AQIM, AAD, and al-Mourabitoun has shifted from collaboration to a structured hierarchy with AQIM at the top.²⁶

AQIM oversees the allied militant groups and provides strategic guidance, direction, and resources. Although scholars claim the affiliates conform to JNIM's strategy, al-Mourabitoun has asserted that it will remain operationally autonomous from the larger group. Additionally, according to the Center for International Security and Cooperation at Stanford University, JNIM was further supported by AQIM to reassert al-Qaeda's presence in Mali after France's intervention in the country in 2013.²⁷

Similar to all al-Qaeda outfits, JNIM also has an emir or leader as its head. The emir is the ultimate authority on strategic and operative decisions and appoints officials to positions within the terror group. Iyad Ag Ghaly serves the role of JNIM's emir, and works closely with Abu Abdul Rahman al Sanhaji, the head judge and deputy leader of al-Mourabitoun, as well as Yahya Abu Hammam, the emir of AQIM in West Africa and the Sahel, and Amadou Kouffa, a JNIM senior leader and former emir of MLF.²⁸

Ghaly also reportedly appoints regional emirs across Mali. Salem Ould Breihmatt, an explosives expert designated as a terrorist by the U.S. and sanctioned by the EU, is the JNIM emir of Arbinda and Serma in the Mopti Region of Mali, and Sidan Ag-Hitta, another senior JNIM leader designated as a terrorist by the U.S. and sanctioned by the EU, is the commander of Kidal Region, Mali.²⁹

It is unknown whether JNIM has its own central decision-making body or if it defers to al-Qaeda central. However, JNIM has its own propaganda division, az-Zallaqa media production company, to promote narratives.³⁰ The most common themes among distributed content are martial prowess and jihad, victimization of Muslims primarily throughout the Sahel, and dehumanization of the enemy. Content published in az-Zallaqa includes images of training camps, drone shots of military formations, and videos of successful operations. The publication also features speeches from JNIM and AQIM leaders and announcements honoring the lives of JNIM militants, both dead and alive.³¹

Financing:

According to scholars on the region, JNIM's principal sources of funding are kidnappings and extortion. JNIM officials also reportedly tax smugglers and traffickers seeking safe transit through JNIM-controlled territories. Additionally, JNIM is reportedly facilitating cocaine-trafficking, human trafficking, and taxation on local populations within its area of control. The populations are allegedly taxed in exchange for goods and services, including "security" and "governance." It is uncertain if JNIM, like other al-Qaeda affiliates, receives funding from supporters abroad, including individuals and non-governmental organizations fronting as charities that divert funds towards the terror group.³²

JNIM obtains significant funding from ransoms paid for the safe delivery of abductees, incentivizing the kidnapping of high-profile individuals such as local leaders and militiamen. Kidnapping persons with political clout also enables JNIM to destabilize local power structures and instill fear within targeted populations. While most abductees are Malian, one foreigner, South African Stephen McGown, was released by JNIM in July 2017 after an alleged ransom payment of 3.5 million euros.³³

On November 29, 2023, the Middle East Media Research Institute (MEMRI) published leaked documents by Project Raven, a confidential surveillance initiative that assists the United Arab Emirates in surveilling other governments, militants, and human rights activists. According to the document, in 2011, the emir of Qatar instructed that $15 million be allocated to burgeoning Islamist movements across northern Mali and the Sahel. The funds were reportedly marked as humanitarian support and were allocated via the state security service under the representation of Qatari official Abdullah bin Hamad Al-Nue'eimi. The documents did not list the earmarked Islamist groups, but during that period active militant Islamist movements throughout the Sahel included JNIM predecessor and affiliate groups such as AQIM, Ansar al-Dine (AAD), al-Mourabitoun, and Macina Liberation Front (MLF or Katiba Macina).³⁴

Recruitment:

In a 2018 interview in the al-Qaeda affiliated al-Masra newsletter, Ghaly stated that JNIM's military policy is to continue "expanding geographically as much as possible, undermining (the) enemy by attacking him wherever he may be, inciting the people to do the same and protecting them, and securing popular support."³⁵ JNIM follows the al-Qaeda blueprint of winning the hearts and minds of local populations to establish itself as a legitimate alternative to the Malian government.³⁶ JNIM reportedly uses revenue from its criminal operations to pay local Malians to join its ranks. Also, by providing basic services such as security and governance to local populations, JNIM projects itself as a viable organization that provides more resources and safety than the Malian government.³⁷

Additionally, the jihadists have exploited intercommunal tension between Mali's Fulani and Dogon ethnic groups by recruiting along ethnic lines.^[4]³⁸ age of Fulani have aligned with militant Islamist groups. Furthermore, those that took up arms with the insurgents have indirectly created a pathway to radicalization for other members in the Fulani community as increased stigmatization of their ethnic group could persuade the disaffected towards groups that provide outlets for acceptance and even vengeance.³⁹

In October 2024, media sources reported that JNIM began increasing its proselytizing activities across communities in Kayes in southern Mali, as well as in Burkina Faso near the border with Niger. The proselytization activities further JNIM's continued commitment to gaining supporters and increasing the geographical domains of their control. Proselytization events included JNIM members preaching and delivering religious lectures to communities near the borders of Mauritania and Senegal, suggesting potential expansion of the group's activities. Similar proselytization events occur in Burkina Faso where over 40 percent of the country is already under JNIM influence.⁴⁰

Training:

JNIM boasts around 2,000 fighters spread throughout northern and central Mali.⁴¹ According to imagery distributed by JNIM's propaganda arm, az-Zallaqa, JNIM trains these fighters in several training camps across Mali. Research published by the U.S. Department of Defense has stated that training operations consist of both physical exercises and propaganda. Additionally, trainees are given a manual of comprehensive instructions for conducting terror operations.⁴²

In terms of weaponry, JNIM has likely exploited the proliferation of arms in West Africa. JNIM militants are reportedly skilled in crafting explosives, utilizing improvised explosive devices (IEDs), vehicle-born improvised explosive devices (VBIED), suicide vehicle-borne improvised explosive devices (SVBIEDS), and suicide vests. Additionally, because JNIM has adjusted its strategy to include more high-casualty and high-profile attacks, JNIM militants have amassed advanced military equipment from raids on army posts and police stations.⁴³

On May 25, 2024, JNIM released photos of a training camp in Burkina Faso where the militants reportedly undergo basic firearms training and drills. They are also reportedly trained in maneuvering motorcycles within large fleets, a common attack strategy used in JNIM's ambush of villages.⁴⁴

History:

Jama'at Nusrat al-Islam wal Muslimeen (JNIM)

Violent history:

- March 2, 2025: JNIM militants ambush soldiers in Ekade Malane area in northern Niger, killing 11.⁴⁶
- January 2025: Over the course of a month, JNIM carries out armed attacks and detonates explosives in the capitals of Sahel, Centre-North, Centre-East, and Est regions in Burkina Faso. Official numbers of casualties are not confirmed, but two attacks killed 80.⁴⁷
- January 22, 2025: JNIM militants ambush a military base in Sebba in Burkina Faso's northeastern Yagha province before storming Sebba and opening fire on its residents for several hours. At least seven civilians and 20 soldiers are killed. Dozens of others are reported injured or missing. JNIM releases a statement claiming responsibility for the attacks and reports their seizure of the military base.⁴⁸
- January 8, 2025: JNIM militants ambush Beninese soldiers at a military base in Alibori region, northern Benin on the border with Burkina Faso and Niger. At least 28 soldiers are killed in one of the biggest attacks on the Beninese army in recent years. JNIM has steadily increased its activities in northern Benin as JNIM has expanded their operations from their insurgency-hit neighbors in the Sahel.⁴⁹
- December 31, 2024: JNIM militants ambush military checkpoints in Mopti region, central Mali. Included in the targets are Malian soldiers and mercenaries from the Wagner Group. The number of casualties is not reported.⁵⁰
- December 5, 2024: JNIM militants clash with soldiers and civilian militias in You in Burkina Faso's North region, killing 12 soldiers.⁵¹
- December 2, 2024: Suspected JNIM militants attack Beninese soldiers guarding the Benin-Niger oil pipeline in Alibori region, northern Benin. The attack kills three and injures four others.⁵²
- November 8, 2024: JNIM militants ambush the village of Solhan, northern Burkina Faso. The attack kills at least 22 and injures four others.⁵³
- November 3, 2024: JNIM militants ambush security officials in Tillaberi region in western Niger, killing one security officer. Aliyu Dahiru, "JNIM's Cross-Border Attacks Threaten Sahel Region's Security Architecture," HumAngle, November 6, 2024, <https://humanglemedia.com/jnims-cross-border-attacks-threaten-sahel-regions-security-architecture/>.
- November 3, 2024: JNIM militants ambush VDP militia in Kari in central Burkina Faso, killing eight.⁵⁴
- November 2, 2024: JNIM militants fire mortars at security checkpoints in Boni-Douentza, southern-central Mali. Casualty figures are not reported. The use of mortars deviates from JNIM's traditional tactic of ambushes and smaller-scale confrontations.⁵⁵
- September 17, 2024: JNIM militants carry out attacks in Bamako, targeting a gendarmes training center and the capital airport, killing 77 and wounding 255 others. Security and airport officials report that militants open fire on both locations. JNIM later releases a statement claiming the attacks resulted in "huge human and material losses and the destruction of several military aircraft."⁵⁶
- August 24, 2024: JNIM gunmen ambush soldiers and civilians in Barsalogho, Burkina Faso. The lethal attack kills approximately 200 and injures an additional 140. The jihadists targeted the town as civilians were digging trenches around the town to prevent attacks from insurgent groups.⁵⁷
- August 2, 2024: JNIM militants release a video of two Russian hostages who claim they have been kidnapped by JNIM in Mbanga, Mali. The hostages are a geologist and an employee of an unspecified Russian company. No further information is reported regarding when the men were taken hostage or whether JNIM has any specific demands.⁵⁸
- July 27, 2024: JNIM claims to ambush mercenaries from the Wagner Group in Tinzaouaten, northern Mali, killing 50. However, the Permanent Strategic Framework for Peace, Security and Development (CSP-PSD) coalition of armed groups in northern Mali claims they carried out the ambush themselves and deny any cooperation with JNIM.⁵⁹
- July 23, 2024: JNIM militants ambush Dembo village in central Mali, killing at least 25.⁶⁰
- July 20, 2024: JNIM militants ambush soldiers at Kpekakandi Base in northern Togo. JNIM kills six soldiers and ultimately seizes the base. This attack marks the expansion of JNIM activity from Mali, Burkina Faso, and Niger, into Togo and Benin.⁶¹
- July 16, 2024: JNIM militants ambush Bagourou, Yabatalou, and Deguessagou villages in southeastern Mali, killing two hunters.⁶²
- June 11, 2024: JNIM militants ambush Burkinabe soldiers in Mansila, on Burkina Faso's border with Niger. The attack kills over 100.⁶³
- May 22, 2024: JNIM militants ambush Burkinabe military forces in Séguénéga, northern Burkina Faso, killing more than 80.⁶⁴
- May 20, 2024: JNIM militants ambush a refugee camp in Boni, Niger. The attack kills a large unconfirmed number of military forces and refugees.⁶⁵

- March 31, 2024: More than 200 JNIM militants ambush Tawori village in central Burkina Faso, killing at least 73. The casualties include 32 civilians, 16 Burkinabe security forces, and 25 militias from the Volontaires pour la défense de la patrie (“Volunteers for the Defense of the Fatherland” or VDP), the state sponsored civilian-led counterterrorism militia.⁶⁶
 - March 28, 2024: JNIM militants open fire on an IDP camp in Goubre village, Yatenga province, northeastern Burkina Faso. The attack injures two civilians.⁶⁷
 - February 28, 2024: More than 100 suspected jihadists ambush an army position in Kwala, Mali. The assailants first detonate a car bomb before opening fire on the troops. The attack reportedly kills several soldiers.⁶⁸
 - February 27, 2024: Three Italian nationals return to Rome following their negotiated release by JNIM in Koutiala, Mali. The victims are from the same family and were kidnapped from their Koutiala home by JNIM militants in May 2022. Their release was secured by Italy’s intelligence agency and its contacts with community leaders and intelligence agencies in Mali. No further details on their release are reported.⁶⁹
 - December 25, 2023: JNIM militants ambush the Mourdiah military base in central Mali. The number of casualties is not confirmed, although JNIM later releases a statement claiming it killed “dozens” of soldiers.⁷⁰
 - December 17, 2023: JNIM releases Gerco van Deventer, a South African paramedic held by JNIM since 2018. The South African charity Gift of the Givers secured Van Deventer’s release for a sum of $500,000. On November 3, 2017, Van Deventer was kidnapped in Libya south of the capital of Tripoli. About a year later, he was relocated to Mali and sold to JNIM.⁷¹
 - November 26, 2023: JNIM militants carry out multiple attacks in Djibo, ambushing military bases, homes, and three displacement camps. At least 40 civilians are killed and another 42 are injured.⁷²
 - November 26, 2023: JNIM militants carry out multiple attacks in Djibo, ambushing military bases, homes, and three displacement camps. At least 40 civilians are killed and another 42 are injured.⁷³
 - September 7, 2023: JNIM militants carry out two attacks on a passenger boat near Timbuktu and an army base in Bamba. The attacks kill 64 people.⁷⁴
 - April 23, 2023: JNIM carries out a double suicide bombing in Sevare, central Mali. The explosions kill 13. The assailants reportedly targeted the camp as it was housing Russian combatants from the Wagner Group. That same day, JNIM militants ambush soldiers in the Koulikoro region, killing 10.⁷⁵
 - April 18, 2023: JNIM militants ambush an official Malian delegation near Nara. The ambush kills Assimi Goita's chief of staff along with at least three other people.⁷⁶
 - January 2023: JNIM carries out a number of attacks in the first few weeks of the year, killing at least 27 and wounding many others. On January 2, the group targets a defense post and a local toll station in Marka-coungo and Kassela, towns just outside of Bamako. The raids kill seven. On January 8, the militants ambush a gendarmerie post in Sebekoro, southwestern Mali, and a custom post in Didieni, north of Bamako. One soldier was killed that day. The group then targets Malian troops on January 10, carrying out assaults in the regions of Mopti and Segou. At least 14 soldiers are killed in the attacks. Another four soldiers were killed in another ambush north of Bamako in Kayes region on January 15. The geography of the attacks suggest JNIM is advancing closer to Bamako.⁷⁷
 - November 24, 2022: Suspected JNIM fighters ambush security forces in Kpendjal, north Togo. At least 17 soldiers are killed.⁷⁸
 - October 29, 2022: Suspected JNIM militants ambush a military convoy near Kikideni locality, eastern Mali. The attack kills at least 15 security forces.⁷⁹

Ties to Extremist Entities:

- ISIS

For two years following JNIM's founding, al-Qaeda and ISIS militants across the Sahel united under a common banner to expel Western forces from the region. According to military leaders from the United States, France, and West Africa, the militants carried out increasingly forceful attacks targeting villages and army bases. However, on May 8, 2020, it was reported in ISIS's weekly al-Naba newspaper that al-Qaeda started a "war" against ISIS militants in West Africa. Al-Naba criticized JNIM's leadership, specifically Iyad Ag Ghaly and Amadou Kouffa, for undermining jihad in favor of negotiating with the Malian government. JNIM sought to diffuse the tension by releasing booklets—indirectly targeted at ISIS sympathizers skeptical of JNIM's motives—calling for unity among all jihadists.¹²³

On May 7, 2020, ISIS revealed in al-Naba that it engaged in tense clashes with al-Qaeda militants in Mali and Burkina Faso. ISIS accused JNIM of instigating the violence as the jihadist camp allegedly mobilized large forces to attack and prevent supplies from getting to ISIS strongholds in Mali and Burkina Faso. According to ISIS, JNIM amped up attacks beginning April 17. Unverified claims from JNIM sources insist that ISIS proposed a ceasefire on May 5, but it was rejected by JNIM. Furthermore, on May 28, ISIS released a statement on Telegram claiming that the COVID-19 pandemic served as punishment for the forces that have fought against ISIS. Additionally, ISIS spokesman Abu Hamza al-Qurashi claimed that ISIS would retaliate against al-Qaeda in Africa due to attacks initiated by the latter insurgent camp. Although specific countries are not listed, Mali and Burkina Faso have since seen increasingly hostile clashes between ISIS and JNIM forces.¹²⁴

- Ansarul Islam

Ansarul Islam is a Burkinabe splinter group of JNIM.¹²⁵ Ibrahim Malam Dicko was an ethnic Peul commander who founded the local insurgency in the northern provinces of Burkina Faso in 2016.¹²⁶ As of 2022, Ansarul Islam primarily consists of Peul fighters who mostly carry out attacks in northern and eastern Burkina Faso as well as near the borders of Mali and Niger.¹²⁷

According to media sources, Ibrahim Dicko died in May 2017 of thirst and exhaustion following a French-led raid on the jihadist group's hideout in Foulsaré forest. Jafar Dicko, who was reportedly influenced by Amadou Koufa, the leader of Katibat Macina, quickly replaced his brother. Scholars on the region claim that Dicko lacks his brother's leadership skills, leading to less activity from the group.¹²⁸

Media Coverage:

JNIM Formation

Upon the announcement of JNIM's formation, media coverage volleyed between two narratives. Some media sources such as Newsweek claimed the merger was an attempt by al-Qaeda to reassert influence against the growing presence of ISIS in the region, while other sources, such as the Associated Press, claimed the extremist group was opportunistic of Mali's ongoing crisis.¹²⁹ Given Mali's fragile security environment, and Bamako's increasingly strained and underequipped security forces, JNIM was faced with favorable circumstances to assert power in the region. Morocco World News noted that JNIM's formation was not only a threat to Mali, but to North Africa as well, as other radical groups will look to JNIM and attempt to "carry out other attacks, larger in number and scale."¹³⁰ Following JNIM's announcement, France 24 mentioned that neighboring governments will come to see Mali "as a launchpad [for extremists] for attacks against other countries in the region." Accordingly, Africa News noted that Mali's delay in implementing the necessary security forces in its jihadist-heavy northern region has made neighboring west African countries vulnerable to increased attacks.¹³¹

Online publication Middle East Eye as well as Morocco World News, focused on the internal shifts among violent extremist groups in the region. Leaders who lost sway within their local groups, such as Mokhtar Belmokhtar of al-Mourabitoun, shifted allegiance to JNIM to reassert their authority within the AQIM network.¹³² Other media sources focused on how JNIM was the manifestation of AQIM's resilience. According to Alia Brahimi of Al Jazeera, AQIM "withstood the chokehold of the Algerian security services, U.S. drones, and the French-led intervention in Mali, to launch a range of attacks in recent years, whether storming a beach resort in Ivory Coast or conducting a low-level insurgency in northern Mali."¹³³

France 24 further noted that since the four local leaders were all in the same video, they easily can collaborate and meet with one another, demonstrating "that it is impossible to monitor this huge region militarily."¹³⁴ The immediacy in which JNIM's leadership could convene within what Saad Eddine Lamzouwaq of Morocco World News called a "geographical safe haven" is critical when each leader has "ties with local ethnic communities and tribes" that can be leveraged against the "weakness of some central governments."¹³⁵

As of 2022, international coverage on JNIM remains frequent as the insurgent group has subjected Mali to increasing levels of violence for the past five years with no prospect of slowing down. Although media sources are not always precise in their differentiation of attacks attributed to JNIM or AQIM, the consensus remains that the terror group remains beyond the control of Malian and foreign forces.

Rhetoric:

Joint AQIM-JNIM Statement, October 13, 2023

Joint AQIM-JNIM statement praising Hamas and encouraging violence on Israel:

“We congratulate your actions and urge you to continue, biting your teeth with patience on the path of jihad...complete what you began and seek help from God alone for it is He who guarantees victory...we in al-Qaeda are racing against time to obtain the ability to reach you to liberate Jerusalem. Our ranks are stacked together, loud and boastful...Hasten and seek forgiveness from your Lord...and light a fire in the West Bank under the feet of the Jews...so rise up and fight the Jews and those who protect the Jews.”¹³⁶

JNIM statement, July 2022

“We say to the Bamako government: if you have the right to hire mercenaries to kill the defenseless innocent people, then we have the right to destroy you and target you.”¹³⁷

Iyad Ag Ghaly, April 3, 2017

In an interview with al-Qaeda's al-Massar publication:

“Our enemies are the enemies of the Muslim people, Jews and Christians, but France remains our historic enemy in this part of the Islamic world. France and its supporters, such as the US, Germany, Sweden, and West African countries that have joined them: Chad, Guinea, Ivory Coast, Burkina Faso, Senegal and Niger.”¹³⁸
